QUESTIONS PRESENTED FOR REVIEW

1.) Whether Louisiana's electioneering law, LSA-R.S. 18:1462 A, (3) & (4) is constitutional in its ban on political campaigning on election day for matters both on and not on the day's ballot and in its prohibition of the use of campaign paraphernalia such as signs, pictures and other forms of political advertising for both ballot and non-ballot matters to a distance of six hundred (600) feet from the polling place on election day.

2.) Is Louisiana's compelling interest in maintaining a Campaign Free Zone around its polling places during elections best served by its total ban on all political campaigning.

3.) Is the 600-Foot limitation in § 1462 narrowly tailored to protect Louisiana's compelling interest.

4.) Is LSA-R.S. 18:1462 overbroad.

5.) Is. LSA-R.S. 18:1462 A (2) void for vagueness.

STATE OF LOUISIANA

Petitioner,

v.

THEODOR A. SCHIRMER,

PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE LOUISIANA SUPREME COURT

Petitioner, the State of Louisiana through its Attorney General, respectfully prays that a Writ of Certiorari be granted to review the decision of the Louisiana Supreme Court entered in the above entitled proceeding on November 30, 1994 and the rehearing denied on March 9, 1995 and that the United States Supreme Court docket the case for argument or in the alternative, order a summary reversal of the Louisiana Supreme Court's decision and uphold the constitutionality of Louisiana's electioneering statute, LSA-R.S. 18;1462 (2) (3) & (4) in accord with the decision of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit in the same federal question arising out of the same fact situation, in Schirmer v. Edwards, 2 F.3d 117 (5th Cir. 1993) writ denied, sub nom, Recall '92 Inc. v. Edwards, ___ U.S. ___, 114 S.Ct. 1396, 128 L.Ed 2d 70 (1994) and in accord with this Honorable Courts' decision in Burson v. Freeman, ___ U.S. ___, 112 S.Ct. 1846, 119 L. Ed 2d 5 (1992).

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This case involves a constitutional challenge to Louisiana's electioneering law, LSA-R.S. 18:1462 A (2) (3) & (4). The Louisiana Supreme Court declared those sections of that statute unconstitutional on federal grounds as violative of the First and Fourteenth amendments to the United States Constitution. This same statute, in this same fact circumstance, but in a civil injunction and declaratory judgment proceeding, was declared constitutional by the United States Court of Appeal for the Fifth Circuit in Schirmer v. Edwards, 2 F.3d 117 (5th Cir. 1993) with a writ denial by this Court, sub nom, Recall '92 v. Edwards, ___ U.S. ___, 114 S.Ct. 1396, 128 L.Ed. 2d 70 (1994). The federal courts did not rule on the constitutionality of LSA-R.S. 18:1462 A (2). This case is a criminal misdemeanor and this writ application presents a situation squarely within the United States Supreme Court's Rules on "Considerations covering Review on Certiorari" Rule 10.1 (b) as follows:

> "When a state court of last resort has decided a federal question in a way in conflict with the decision of . . . . a federal court of appeal."

This case involves not only the same federal question, i.e. the constitutionality of LSA-R.S. 18:1462 A (3) & (4) on federal first amendment grounds, it is the same fact circumstance. After the Fifth Circuit's decision in Schirmer v. Edwards, was upheld by this court's writ denial, the Louisiana Supreme Court on November 30, 1994, rehearing denied March 9, 1995, declared the same statute unconstitutional on federal grounds. The Louisiana Supreme Court claimed reliance on Burson v. Freeman, ___ U.S. ___, 112 S.Ct. 1846, 119 L.Ed 2d 5 (1992), but reached a decision which applicants submit is in conflict therewith. Its decision is directly in conflict with the Fifth Circuit's decision on the same statute.

This case arises out of the misdemeanor prosecution of Theodor A. Schirmer, a lawyer, for attempting to solicit signatures on a recall petition on election day. The facts as found by the Louisiana Supreme Court are set forth in its decision which is included in the appendix. The stipulated facts are as follows:

(1) On October 3, 1992, and at all pertinent times the defendant was conducting his activities within one hundred (100) feet of the polling place at Lee High School, East Baton Rouge Parish, Louisiana;

(2) The activities being conducted by the defendant were concerned solely with the issue of the recall petition of Governor Edwin Edwards which was not on the ballot;

(3) The defendant was not harassing or intimidating any person who was at the polling place to vote;

(4) The defendant was provided written notice to cease his activity or move from the area within six hundred (600) feet of the polling place by the person authorized to provide such notice at the polling location and defendant refused to comply with the written request;

(5) A police officer was summoned and defendant was arrested for failure to cease his activity within six hundred (600) feet of the polling place.

After Schirmer's arrest, the state court prosecution proceeded. On July 19, 1993 a hearing was held on Schirmer's Motion to Quash the bill of information on the grounds that the statute violated his free speech rights under the state and federal constitutions. The trial court declared the statute unconstitutional, concluding that the statute as drawn was unconstitutionally overbroad insofar as it prohibits all political activity within six hundred (600) feet of polling places, and sustained Schirmer's Motion to Quash "on that basis alone and no other." App ___ 81." The State of Louisiana appealed to the Louisiana Supreme Court which affirmed the trial court.

The procedural history of this case as well as the companion federal case, Schirmer v. Edwards, supra, is thoroughly set forth by the Louisiana Supreme Court in its decision and will not be repeated herein. That court held:

> "that LSA-R.S. 18:1462 A (3) & (4), insofar as they prohibit all political authority (including that unrelated to ballot matters) within six hundred (600) feet of a polling place on election day, are unconstitutionally overbroad."

State v. Schirmer, p. 901.

In reaching this decision the Louisiana Supreme Court is in direct conflict with the Federal Fifth Circuit on the same federal question regarding the constitutionality of the same Louisiana statute, arising out of the same fact situation. A writ of certiorari should be granted, Ward v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 767, 770, 97 S.Ct. 2085, 2088, (1977) Baldwin v. Alabama, 105 S.Ct. 2727, 2729, 472 U.S. 372, 374, (1985), Memorial Hospital v. Maricopa County, 94 S.Ct. 1076, 1079. 415 U.S. 250, 253 (1974).

The Louisiana Supreme Court also failed to adhere to this Court's Burson decision by substituting what that court views as the appropriate statute in place of the statute enacted by the Louisiana Legislature and approved by the federal courts.

The State Supreme Court also declared § A (2) of the statute void for vagueness.

Petitioner now seeks review of the Louisiana Supreme Court's decision by this Court by Writ of Certiorari.

REASONS FOR GRANTING WRIT OF CERTIORARI

MAY IT PLEASE THE COURT:

Introduction

This is a case falling squarely within the Honorable Court's Rules on Considerations Governing Review on Writ of Certiorari, Rule 10 (b) in that the judgment of the Louisiana Supreme Court, for which review is sought is contrary to the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals, Fifth Circuit, concerning the constitutionality of the same Louisiana statute.

THE STATUTE

The Statute declared unconstitutional in part by the Louisiana Supreme Court and upheld by the United States Fifth Circuit is LSA-R.S. 18:1462 (A) (2)(3) & (4) which reads as follows:

LSA-R.S. 18:1462 A

§ 1462. Acts prohibited on election day; electioneering; exception; enforcement; penalty

A. Except as otherwise specifically provided by law, it shall be unlawful for any person, between the hours of 6:00 a.m. and 9:00 p.m., to perform or cause to be performed any of the following acts within any polling place being used in an election on election day or within any place wherein absentee voting is being conducted, or within a radius of six hundred feet of the entrance to any polling place being used in an election on election day or any place wherein absentee voting is being conducted:

(1) To solicit in any manner or by any means whatsoever any other person to vote for or against any candidate or proposition being voted on in such election.

(2) To remain within any such polling place or place wherein absentee voting is being conducted or within a radius of six hundred feet of the entrance of any such polling place, except when exercising the right to vote, after having been directed, in writing, by an election commissioner or law enforcement officer to leave the premises or area of a polling place or after having been directed, in writing, by a registrar or deputy registrar to leave the place wherein absentee voting is being conducted.

(3) To hand out, place, or display campaign cards, pictures, or other campaign literature of any kind or description whatsoever.

(4) To place or display political signs, pictures, or other forms of political advertising.

Amended by Acts 1980, No. 810, § 1; Acts 1982, No. 778, § 1, eff. Aug. 4, 1982.

The Louisiana Supreme Court declared section A (3) & (4) unconstitutional on grounds of overbreadth, and A (2) invalid for vagueness.

ARGUMENT

In the companion federal case, Schirmer v. Edwards, 2 F.3d 117 (5th Cir. 1993), in the injunction phase of that case, the Fifth Circuit had certified to the Louisiana Supreme Court the question of whether the electioneering statute, section A (3) & (4), within a radius of 600 feet from the polls, prohibited all solicitations of signatures for a recall petition that is not on the ballot and did it prohibit the wearing of clothing or buttons bearing visible words or symbols supportive of such recall, Schirmer v. Edwards, 608 So.2d 948 (La. 1992). In response to that certification, the Louisiana Supreme Court held as follows,

> We find the clear intent of this statute, when taken as a whole, is to prohibit political activity within 600 feet of the polls on election day in order to prevent disruption of the polling place and the election process. Although we agree that subsection (1) does not apply to the present case, we believe subsections (3) and (4) clearly proscribe the conduct at issue. Subsection (3) prohibits the handing out, placement or display of campaign literature "of any kind or description whatsoever." . . . .

Id at 948. The decision on certification is contained in the appendix. The Louisiana Supreme Court found that the intent of the statute was to prohibit all political campaigning or activity within 600 feet from the polls. Armed with this decision, the Fifth Circuit issued a decision, Schirmer v. Edwards, No. 92-3900 (5th Cir. Oct. 29, 1992) enjoining Louisiana's officials from enforcing the statute beyond 100 feet from the polling places. Upon consideration of the entire case on appeal, the Fifth Circuit on September 17, 1993 upheld the constitutionality of the statute including the 600 foot zone, thereby reversing the earlier federal panel on the injunction, finding;

> ". . . . that a total ban on politicking within the campaign-free zone is not overbroad. In fact, the total ban in the present context is the most defensible position. The state has a compelling interest in protecting its voters and the proffered reasons given by the legislature demonstrate a reasonable compromise to the problems that necessitated the campaign-free zone in the beginning.

2 F.3d at 123.

The Louisiana Court, when it considered the same statute in the criminal case, almost agreed but declared section 3 & 4 unconstitutional for overbreadth. The Court found that the statute, in prohibiting all political campaigning or "politicking" to use the Fifth Circuit's term, to a distance of 600 feet was overbroad. The Court in State v. Schirmer, 646 So.2d at 900 stated:

> "In light of the Burson plurality's approval of the 100 foot boundary employed by Tennessee, were the Louisiana statutory ban on all political speech limited to a 100 foot radius about polling places, we would likely reverse the ruling of the district court declaring the statute unconstitutional."

> "This is not to say that a more narrowly drawn statute, perhaps one which addressed only advertising and voter solicitation relative to matters on the ballot, like the 100 foot Tennessee statute in Burson, supra, but one which operates within 600 feet of a polling place, would similarly fail to pass constitutional muster.

It is clear that the 600 foot limitation itself was not a controlling factor and would probably have been approved by the Louisiana Court. The Court then held that it was the combination of these factors, (1) distance at 600 feet and (2) a total ban on political campaigning that crossed the constitutional line, saying at page 902.

> "rather, today we hold only that when both of these aspects of the challenged provisions operate in tandem, extending a total ban on political speech to a distance of 600 feet from polling places, the resulting limitation of free speech at that point overburdens or 'significantly impinges' First Amendment freedoms."

Applicants must note that nothing in the statute bans all political speech, it bans political campaigning. The Court left intact LSA-R.S. 18:1462 A (1), both because it was not challenged and because the Court's reasoning supported it.

Unfortunately the end result was a declaration of invalidity of the State's electioneering statute, in large part.

In the absence of a reversal by the United States Supreme Court, Louisiana will have an electioneering law that doesn't apply to non-ballot matters and doesn't ban advertising or sign usage at the polls at all, even for on ballot matters. Most importantly the decision itself, and the statute suggested by the Louisiana Supreme Court result in an enforcement nightmare, where campaigning is allowed for non-ballot matters at the polls on election day, thereby requiring election workers to determine who is campaigning for what election or proposition. All of this in the face of the United States Fifth Circuit's recognition and holding that a total ban on "politicking" in the campaign free zone is the best solution, See Schirmer v. Edwards, Id. at p. 123.

BURSON V. FREEMAN

All of the lower Courts that have decided this case or its companion federal case have acknowledged that this Court's recent decision in Burson v. Freeman, ___ U.S. ___, 112 S.Ct. 1846, 119 L.Ed. 2d 5 (1992) controlled the outcome. The federal fifth Circuit in Schirmer v. Edwards, the civil case, paid strict adherence to the principles of Burson and found that Louisiana had a compelling interest in maintaining a campaign-free zone on election day, that the statute was narrowly tailored to achieve that interest and was not overbroad. The federal court found that the Louisiana statutes' total ban on political activity, as found on certification to the Louisiana Supreme Court at 608 So.2d 948 (La. 1992) was the most defensible position. The Fifth Circuit stated that the total ban could solve Justice Stevens' objections to the Tennessee statute in Burson, see Edwards p. 123. The logic of this interpretation is clear. The state's compelling interest in preventing voter intimidation and election fraud as found in Burson, supra, are best served by a total ban on political campaigning at the polls. Common sense dictates that if some campaigning is allowed, enforcement would become impossible.

The Louisiana Supreme Court, in this case, agreed, up to a point, holding that a total ban up to 100 feet would be permissible, and a ban on ballot related activities would be permissible up to 600 feet but the total ban to 600 feet is unconstitutional. The end result was an unconstitutional statute. The heart of the Louisiana decision is that at 600 feet, the total ban is an impermissible infringement on freedom of speech grounds under the federal constitution.

The obvious question presented to this Court is whether or not Louisiana's 600 foot campaign free zone, determined to be necessary by the legislature, is impermissibly large. In 1966, this Court in Mills v. Alabama, 384 U.S. 214, 86 S.Ct. 1434, 16 L.Ed. 2d 484 (1966) struck down a state law that made it a crime to publish an editorial on election day urging readers to vote a particular way, Burson, 112 S.Ct. 1848. Twenty-six years later, the Burson Court in upholding the 100 foot Tennessee ban on campaigning stated at 112 S.Ct. 1857,

> "We do not think that the minor geographic limitation prescribed by Section 2-7-111 (b) constitutes such a significant impingement. Thus, we simply do not view the question whether the 100-foot boundary line could be somewhat tighter as a question of "constitutional dimension."

It is applicant's position that the Louisiana Supreme Court erred in finding the State's 600 Foot ban on all political campaigning unconstitutionally large.

The Louisiana court's decision on statutory interpretation on certification to the Fifth Circuit is binding in this case. R.A.V. v. City of St. Paul, Minnesota, ___ U.S. ___, 112 S.Ct. 2538, 120 L.Ed. 2d 305. The Fifth Circuit in Schirmer v. Edwards properly held that the total ban was more acceptable and enforceable and also found after a thorough review of the legislative history presented in that case, that the 600 foot ban was narrowly tailored to achieve the compelling governmental interest recognized in Burson as follows,

> "We find that this wide-spread and time-tested consensus demonstrates that some restricted zone is necessary in order to serve the States' compelling interest in preventing voter intimidation and election fraud. . . . Moreover, because law enforcement officers generally are barred from the vicinity of the polls to avoid any appearance of coercion in the electoral process, see Tenn.Code Ann. § 2-7-103 (1985), many acts of interference would go undetected. These undetected or less than blatant acts may nonetheless drive the voter away before remedial action can be taken."

Burson at 112 S.Ct. 1855.

Louisiana also bars law enforcement officers at the polls on election day, LSA-R.S. 18:428. The Burson court found that the real question was how large a zone is required, p. 1856. Burson continued at 112 S.Ct. 1857 to discuss what is at the heart of the instant case. A state legislature is not required to prove that the boundary is perfectly tailored to deal with voter intimidation and election fraud. A State's political system is not required to sustain some level of damage before its legislature can take corrective action. In essence, the legislature may respond to the problem and that response is acceptable until it significantly impinges on first amendment rights. At this point it is important to note that the goal of these type statutes is to prohibit voter intimidation and election fraud and to allow the polling places to be campaign free zones. It is the right and obligation of each state to determine how large a zone it deems necessary.

All 50 states limit access to areas in or around polling places, Burson, 112 S.Ct. 1855. These zones are not designed to create difficulties for political campaigning at the polls, they are designed to eliminate it. New Hampshire has 10 feet, Louisiana has 600 feet, Kentucky and Wisconsin have 500 feet, thirty-eight states have established campaign free zones of 250 feet or less and Hawaii's is the country's largest at 1000 feet, see Burson, 112 S.Ct. 1855 reference to Note, Defoliating the Grassroots; Election Day Restrictions on Political Speech, 77 Geo. L.J. 2137 (1989). None of these states are right or wrong, they have different circumstances. Louisiana and New Hampshire are different places. Louisiana has had a restricted zone around polling places since 1894 beginning with 15 feet. In 1980, by Act 180, the Legislature increased the zone from 300 feet to 600 feet, its present distance. This history is not of record in this case but it was in the Fifth Circuit case, Schirmer v. Edwards, supra. The motivating factors for the 1980 amendment increasing the distance from 300 to 600 feet were summarized by the Fifth Circuit at 2 F.3d 121 as follows:

> "Louisiana State Representative Charles Lancaster, who authored the 1980 amendments to Section 1462, testified before the court below. The 1980 amendments expanded the campaign-free zone from 300 feet to 600 feet. Representative Lancaster testified that the statute primarily sought to guard against: (i) voter intimidation; (ii) voter harassment; and (iii) to provide unobstructed access to the polls. Lancaster testified that the problem largely emanated from poll workers, who bombarded voters in and around the polls. Apparently, it was common practice to use poll workers to inundate voters just prior to their entry to the polls. The legislature felt compelled to remedy the situation statutorily. The intent of the statute was to encourage voter participation. Under the statutorily created campaign-free zone, voters are free to vote without passing through a gauntlet of poll workers."

It is the judgment of this state's citizens as expressed by their elected legislators that the 600 foot zone is appropriate. This statute is narrowly drawn in that it applies only when the polls are open on election day and on absentee voting days and its distance is directed to stop campaigning only at the polling places. This statute is necessary in order to provide Louisiana's citizens free and unencumbered access to the polls so that they may exercise their right to vote freely and without interference, intimidation or fraud.

THE CLEAR ISSUE

The issue in this case is clear in light of this Court's holding in Burson, hence, the request for an alternative summary disposition. After that decision in 1992, which validated a 100 foot zone, the constitutional parameters were from that point to Mills v. Alabama, supra which invalidated the anti-editorial law, thus no distance. The Louisiana Supreme Court in this case has declared 600 feet to be an unconstitutional infringement on free speech, when it encompasses a ban on all campaign activity. There is no question that at some distance, these laws would be invalid. It is the state's position that 600 feet is not that distance. It is narrowly drawn and specifically designed to protect voting not stifle speech.

The issue for decision by the United States Supreme Court is whether the 600 foot zone is impermissably large when applied to all political campaigning whether ballot related or not.

LSA-R.S. 18:1462 (A) (2) IS NOT VOID FOR VAGUENESS

The Louisiana Supreme Court also declared section (A) (2) of the electioneering statute void for vagueness. That section makes it a misdemeanor crime to remain within 600 feet of a polling place after being given written instructions to leave by a poll commissioner or a law enforcement officer. That court held that enforcement of the statute and the conduct prohibited depended upon the discretion of the official on the scene. It is applicant's position that the conduct proscribed is exactly that conduct prohibited in LSA-R.S. 18:1462 which is far from vague. If a person violates the electioneering law then section (2) is applicable. It is the state's position that the statutory scheme envisions the poll commissioner ordering someone to leave only after that person has violated a specific provision of the electioneering law itself. The list of prohibited conduct is contained in the statute itself. There is no dispute that Schirmer was engaged in conduct that should have triggered the application of section (A) (2) see App. 19.

CONCLUSION

This writ application does not require a detailed discussion of the tension between the right to vote freely and the freedom of speech or to campaign. That was done by this Supreme Court in Burson v. Freeman, supra. The federal fifth circuit upheld Louisiana's statute on federal constitutional grounds in Schirmer v. Edwards, supra and this Court denied writs, sub nom, Recall '92 v. Edwards, supra. The Fifth Circuit correctly held that a total ban on "politicking" around the polls was the most defensible position and the most enforceable law. The Louisiana Supreme Court has declared Louisiana's electioneering law unconstitutional because of that total ban on ballot and non ballot matters to 600 feet. Applicants respectfully submit that the Louisiana statute is constitutional under the principles enunciated in Burson and followed in Schirmer v. Edwards.

The issues in this case are clear and probably do not need reargument in light of the recentness of the Burson case, hence the request for summary disposition. The issues at stake here have been elaborately and effectively discussed by the United States Fifth Circuit and by the Louisiana Supreme Court. Their decisions are in conflict. The State submits that the Federal decision should prevail on federal constitutional grounds.

The decision to be made by the United States Supreme Court is whether or not Louisiana's 600 foot campaign free zone as applied to both ballot and non-ballot matters is constitutional. By reversing the Louisiana Court and upholding the 600 foot zone, the distance parameters of the campaign free zones of 49 states will have been validated.

The Louisiana Supreme Court decision is contrary to the controlling United States Supreme Court precedent and contrary to the Federal appellate Court's decision regarding the constitutionality of the same statute in the same fact circumstance. This court should grant a writ of certiorari to correct the error of the Louisiana Supreme Court.

Respectfully submitted,

APPENDIX 1

v.

Theodor A. SCHIRMER.

No.* 93-KA-2631.

Supreme Court of Louisiana.

Nov. 30, 1994.

Rehearing Denied March 9, 1995.

Order Concurring in Denial of Rehearing March 9, 1995.

The State of Louisiana filed a bill of information charging Theodor A. Schirmer with violating LSA-R.S. 18:1462(A), subsections (2), (3) and (4). In order to provide a sanctuary around polling places so that the electorate might exercise its right to vote without interference and without fear of harassment or intimidation, this statute effectively prohibits all political speech, including that unrelated to matters on the ballot, at a distance of up to 600 feet from polling places on election days.[1] Defendant filed a motion to quash the information, alleging

A. Except as otherwise specifically provided by law, it shall be unlawful for any person, between the hours of 6:00 a.m. and 9:00 p.m., to perform or that the statute under which he was being prosecuted was unconstitutional. The trial court granted the defendant's motion, finding the statute's proscription of all political speech, including that unrelated to matters on the ballot, within 600 feet of the polling place on election days, to be an unconstitutionally overbroad limitation upon the defendant's right of free speech and expression. The State of Louisiana sought review in this Court, invoking our supervisory and appellate jurisdiction. We docketed the case as an appeal under Article V, § 5(D) of the Louisiana Constitution of 1974, since it involves a statute's having been declared unconstitutional.

After considering the statute and the record, we conclude that the trial court was correct in its determination that LSA-R.S. 18:1462(A)(3) and (4) are unconstitutionally overbroad. In addition, we find LSA-R.S. 18:1462(A)(2) unconstitutionally cause to be performed any of the following acts within any polling place being used in an election on election day or within any place wherein absentee voting is being conducted, or within a radius of six hundred feet of the entrance to any polling place being used in an election on election day or any place wherein absentee voting is being conducted:

(1) To solicit in any manner or by any means whatsoever any other person to vote for or against any candidate or proposition being voted on in such election.

(2) To remain within any such polling place or place wherein absentee voting is being conducted or within a radius of six hundred feet of the entrance of any such polling place except when exercising the right to vote, after having been directed, in writing, by an election commissioner or law enforcement officer to leave the premises or area of a polling place or after having been directed, in writing, by a registrar or deputy registrar to leave the place wherein absentee voting is being conducted.

(3) To hand out, place, or display campaign cards, pictures, or other campaign literature of any kind or description whatsoever.

(4) To place or display political signs, pictures, or other forms of political advertising.

vague, as it fails to establish adequate guidance to authorities for its enforcement. For the reasons set forth in this opinion, we affirm the judgement of the district court declaring the statute unconstitutional, in violation of the First and Fourteenth Amendments of the United States Constitution.

I. Facts and Procedural Background

Defendant Theodor A. Schirmer is the executive director of a group which styles itself "Recall '92, Inc." The organization's principal objective was to recall the Governor. It was first necessary to obtain the signatures of one-third of the electorate on a recall petition within a 180-day period.[2] See LSA- R.S. 18:1300.1 et seq.

In October of 1992, the period relevant to this case, Recall '92 was in the middle of its drive (it had until December) to collect the required number of signatures (they were still in need of 750,000 signatures) to force a recall election. Given the voter interest in the November, 1992, presidential election, Recall '92 decided to solicit signatures at polling places during the primary election of October 3, 1992, and the general (presidential) election of November 3, 1992.

This decision by Recall '92 to appear at the polls on October 3 was influenced in part by a belief that the solicitation at polling places of signatures for the recall petition would not constitute a violation of Louisiana law. Theodor A. Schirmer, a lawyer by profession, was aware that the Attorney General had issued two opinions addressing the solicitation near polling places of signatures for petitions unrelated to matters on the ballot. These opinions were that such a solicitation of signatures neither violated the Election Code generally nor LSA-R.S. 18:1462(A) specifically, as long as the activity did not interfere with the voting process. See Atty.Gen.Op., Nos. 91-597 (November 12, 1991), and 92-650 (September 24, 1992).

On October 1, 1992, however, two days before the scheduled primary elections at which Recall '92 planned to make its appearance, the Attorney General issued opinion No. 92-650(A). In that opinion the Attorney General, relying upon Lacour v. State of Louisiana, No. 90-C-1772 (La.App. 4 Cir.1990), an unpublished opinion out of the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeal, recalled and rescinded his two prior opinions.

Schirmer received a copy of Attorney General Opinion No. 92-650(A) several days prior to the October 3 election. Although Schirmer instructed Recall '92 members to leave polling areas if requested to do so by a poll commissioner, he decided he would personally challenge the constitutionality of LSA-R.S. 18:1462(A). Accordingly, he alerted the officials charged with enforcing the Election Code of his intentions.

On October 3, Schirmer first attempted to vote at his registered precinct, University Terrace in Baton Rouge, but was denied access to the polls because he was wearing a t-shirt bearing a "Recall '92" slogan. Schirmer departed, without incident and without casting a vote, and travelled to the polling place at Lee High School, also in Baton Rouge, where, under the gaze of poll commissioners and other officials, he set up a table and began gathering signatures for the recall petition. After Schirmer refused verbal and written directions to leave, he was placed under arrest.

Following his arrest, Schirmer and related parties filed suit in federal court seeking declaratory and injunctive relief against the enforcement of LSA-R.S. 18:1462(A). On October 19 and 20, 1992, the United States District Court for the Middle District of Louisiana, Polozola, J., presiding, conducted a two-day trial to determine the constitutionality of LSA-R.S. 18:1462(A). At the trial's conclusion, the district court, relying primarily upon Burson v. Freeman, — U.S. ——, 112 S.Ct. 1846, 119 L.Ed.2d 5 (1992), found that the statute was constitutional. Accordingly, he dismissed the plaintiffs' lawsuit and denied injunctive relief for the November 3 election.

Plaintiffs appealed the federal district court's decision to the United States Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, seeking in the interim temporary injunctive relief pending appeal. In response to the latter, a panel of the Fifth Circuit certified the following question to this Court pursuant to La.S.Ct. Rule XII:

> Whether La.R.S. 18:1462A proscribes on election day, outside of the polling place itself but within a radius of six hundred feet from the entrance thereto, all solicitation of signatures for a recall petition that is not on the ballot that is to be voted on at the election for which the polling place is open, and in the polling place or said six hundred foot radius all wearing of clothing or buttons bearing visible words or symbols supportive of such recall?

Schirmer v. Edwards, 608 So.2d 948, 948 (La.1992).

On October 29, 1992, this Court responded to the certified question. We began by noting that "the clear intent of this statute, when taken as a whole, is to prohibit political activity within 600 feet of the polls on election day in order to prevent disruption of the polling place and the election process." Schirmer, supra, 608 So.2d at 949 (La.1992). Applying the statute to the particular facts of this case, the Court found that although LSA-R.S. 18:1462(A)(1) did not apply to Schirmer's actions, "subsections (3) and (4) clearly prohibit the conduct at issue."[3] Id. Specifically, we stated the following:

[3]The Court directly answered the certified question in the following way:

> La.R.S. 18:1462(A)(3) proscribes on election day, outside of the polling place itself but within a radius of six hundred feet from the

> "We find the solicitation of signatures for a recall petition not on the ballot of that election, but which its backers ultimately hope to get on the ballot, fits this broad definition of handing out or displaying campaign literature. Likewise, we hold the wearing of clothing or buttons supporting such a recall effort is a display of political advertising prohibited by subsection (4)."

Id., citing Atty.Gen.Op., No. 92-650(A), and Lacour v. State of Louisiana, supra. We were careful to note, however, that "our opinion deals only with the question certified [one regarding statutory interpretation], and we do not pass on any issues of constitutionality under either the United States Constitution or the Louisiana Constitution." Id., at 948 n1.

Upon receipt of our answer to the certified question the Fifth Circuit, and armed with this Court's construction of LSA-R.S. 18:1462(A), granted Schirmer's and the other plaintiffs' motion for injunctive relief pending disposition of their appeal.[4] Specifically, the federal appellate court enjoined state of-> entrance thereto, all solicitation of signatures for a recall petition that is not on the ballot that is to be voted on at the election for which the polling place is open. La.R.S. 18:1462(A)(4) proscribes in the polling place or said six hundred foot radius all wearing of clothing or buttons bearing visible words or symbols supportive of such recall.

Schirmer, supra, at 949.

The Louisiana Legislature has since clarified this issue by enacting LSA-R.S. 18:1300.6(A), which makes it a misdemeanor offense for "any person to circulate recall petitions or seek signatures to a recall petition within any polling place . . . or within a radius of (600) feet of the entrance to any polling place . . . on election day." See La.Acts 1993, No. 219, § 1. While the constitutionality of LSA-R.S. 18:1300.6(A) is not currently at issue, we do consider our decision in this case instructive on this point.

[4]This action of the Fifth Circuit was of course predicated upon the probability of the federal plaintiffs' success in their suit. That determination was ficials from enforcing LSA-R.S. 18:1462(A) so as to preclude Schirmer and others from soliciting, on public streets, sidewalks or other outdoor public areas, signatures for the recall petition at polling sites during the November 3 presidential election. Schirmer v. Edwards, No. 92-3900 (5th Cir. Oct. 29, 1992). The injunction did, however, allow enforcement of the statute within 100 feet of the entrances to polling places.

In state court, meanwhile, the criminal prosecution of Schirmer for violating LSA-R.S. 18:1462(A) proceeded, and on July 19, 1993, a hearing was held in conjunction with Schirmer's motion to quash the bill of information.[5] In conjunction with this hearing the State and Schirmer entered into a joint stipulation of fact which set forth the following:

> (1) On October 3, 1992, and at all pertinent times the defendant was conducting his activities within one hundred (100) feet of the polling place at Lee High School, East Baton Rouge Parish, Louisiana;
> (2) The activities being conducted by the defendant were concerned solely with the issue of the recall petition of Governor Edwin Edwards which was not on the ballot;

in large measure based upon the testimony presented on October 19 and 20 before the federal district court in Baton Rouge. Since the evidence adduced during those two days is not part of the record before us, it can have no impact upon our consideration or decision in this case. However, as the decision of the Fifth Circuit granting injunctive relief was properly introduced into evidence in the proceeding below, we have considered its contents, including the reasons given by the Fifth Circuit for its ruling, in arriving at our decision.

[5]This motion challenged the statute's constitutionality on the grounds of violation of the free speech provisions of the federal and state constitutions, including overbreadth, the selective enforcement of the statute against Schirmer, and "other reasons which will be shown at the hearing of this motion." In addition, Schirmer has raised before this Court the question of whether the statute is unconstitutionally vague.

(3) The defendant was not harassing or intimidating any person who was at the polling place to vote;

(4) The defendant was provided written notice to cease his activity or move from the area within six hundred (600) feet of the polling place by the person authorized to provide such notice at the polling location and defendant refused to comply with the written request;

(5) A police officer was summoned and defendant was arrested for failure to cease his activity within six hundred (600) feet of the polling place.

After considering this joint stipulation and the testimony of several witnesses,[6] the trial court declared the statute unconstitutional and quashed the information. The judge noted that Louisiana's 600-foot boundary was the second largest in the United States, and that "the majority of states enforce a 100-foot boundary."[7] In addition, the trial court considered the [6]All four witnesses were called by the defense. They included Jerry Fowler, Commissioner of Elections and Voter Registration for the State of Louisiana; Doug Welborn, Clerk of Court for the Nineteenth Judicial District (East Baton Rouge Parish), State of Louisiana; Rosemary Cannon, Supervisor of the Election Department for Welborn; and the defendant, Theodor A. Schirmer.

[7]The facts relied upon by the trial court were in large measure culled from the opinion of the Fifth Circuit rendered in conjunction with the granting of Schirmer and the other federal plaintiffs' motion for an interim injunction. See Schirmer v. Edwards, supra, at 8. The Fifth Circuit's well-researched opinion also established the following:

> We note that the distance prescribed by section 1462A is 600 feet, 6 times that sustained in Burson; the area involved is more than 1,130,000 square feet, approximately 36 times as large as that involved in Burson (31,400 square feet). This is greater than any state except Hawaii, which uses a 1,000 foot radius. Only two other states, Kentucky and Wisconsin, each five hundred feet, exceed three hundred feet. Some 37 or 38 states use 250 feet or less, some

United States Supreme Court's pronouncement in Burson v. Freeman, supra, and concluded that "[i]n the Burson case the Supreme Court didn't give you a whole lot to go on other than to say there is nothing wrong with a hundred feet." The judge concluded that the statute as drawn was unconstitutionally overbroad insofar as it prohibits all political activity within 600 feet of polling places, and sustained Schirmer's motion to quash "on that basis alone and no other." The State of Louisiana took exception to this ruling, and moved for and received permission to seek review in this Court. See La. Const. Art. V, § 5(D).

Two months later, the United States Fifth Circuit[8] handed down a final decision in Schirmer's federal appeal. Schirmer v. Edwards, 2 F.3d 117 (5th Cir.1993). Like the federal and state district courts before them, the Fifth Circuit found Burson v. Freeman, supra, the controlling precedent. Following the analysis of the Burson plurality,[9] the Fifth Circuit found that the Louisiana statute implicated three First Amendment Concerns ("regulation of political speech, regulation of speech in a pub-

25 of these using 100 feet or less.

Schirmer, supra, at 8, citing Note, Defoliating the Grassroots: Election Day Restrictions in Political Speech, 77 Geo.L.J. 2137, 2146- 47, 2196-2200 (1989).

[8]The panel of the Fifth Circuit which handed down the ultimate decision in Schirmer's federal appeal was not composed of the same judges as the panel that had earlier granted Schirmer's motion for an injunction pending appeal.

[9]Burson will be discussed in greater detail infra. The opinion of the Court in Burson was a plurality opinion authored by Justice Blackmun and joined by Chief Justice Rehnquist and Justices White and Kennedy. Justice Kennedy also filed a separate concurring opinion. Justice Scalia concurred in the judgement, but differed with the plurality on the reasoning behind the judgement. Justice Stevens, joined by Justices O'Connor and Souter, dissented. Justice Thomas took no part in the consideration or decision of the case.

lic forum, and regulation of speech based on content"), and that therefore "[s]trict scrutiny requires Louisiana to show that Section 1462 is narrowly tailored to achieve a compelling governmental interest." Schirmer, supra, 2 F.3d at 120 (citation omitted).

After examining the record before it, the Fifth Circuit concluded "that Louisiana undoubtedly has a compelling interest to protect its citizens' right to vote." Schirmer, supra, 2 F.3d at 121. However, at this point in its analysis the Fifth Circuit departed from the prior finding of the state district court under review here, as well as from the reasoning of the prior Fifth Circuit panel which had granted Schirmer and the other federal plaintiffs an injunction for the November 3 election. The federal appellate court found the statute to be "narrowly drawn and not an excessive infringement on the First Amendment." Id., at 124. In addressing the statute's embrace of all political speech, not only speech related to matters on the ballot, the Fifth Circuit found that "[t]he need for a total ban is compelling and Section 1462 is not overbroad." Id. Based upon these findings, the Fifth Circuit found that Louisiana's statute represents a "constitutional compromise" and affirmed the district court's dismissal of Schirmer's and the other federal plaintiffs' suit. Id.[10]

Thus, to summarize, the case now before us arose out of the arrest of Theodor A. Schirmer on October 3, 1992. That arrest led to the filing of a federal civil suit by Schirmer and related parties, and to a criminal prosecution of Schirmer by the State of Louisiana. The federal suit proceeded to trial first, with the district court finding the statute under which Schirmer was arrested constitutional and dismissing the lawsuit. A panel of the federal appellate court, however, expressing doubts as to the statute's constitutionality under the First Amendment, issued an injunction favorable to the federal plaintiffs regarding the November 3, 1992, elections. Following this action, the state district court, following the reasoning of the federal appellate panel which issued the injunction, granted a motion to quash on the grounds that the statute was an unconstitutionally overbroad impingement of Schirmer's right to free speech and expression. A different panel of the federal appellate court, however, subsequently departed from the reasoning of the earlier panel and found the statute constitutional, affirming the United States district court's dismissal of the federal civil lawsuit. We now consider, in review of the decision of the state district court quashing the information in the criminal prosecution, the constitutionality of LSA-R.S. 18:1462(A)(2)-(4).

[10]The plaintiffs' petition for certiorari to the United States Supreme Court was subsequently denied, sub nom. Recall '92, Inc. v. Edwards, — U.S. ——, 114 S.Ct. 1396, 128 L.Ed.2d 70 (1994), and the decision of the Fifth Circuit is now final.

II. Discussion

As the lengthy procedural history of this case suggests, the issues which we consider in this opinion have already been examined in a number of fora, leaving this Court with some not entirely consistent opinions regarding these matters. At the outset we deem it advisable to set forth the basic principles of First Amendment[11] jurisprudence which will guide our review of this case.

A. Fundamental Precepts of First Amendment Review

The United States Supreme Court has adopted (as in many areas of constitutional jurisprudence) a means-ends analysis or "balancing" approach in assessing the validity of state action which burdens a citizen's exercise of free speech. See Konigsberg v. State Bar of California, 366 U.S. 36, 49-51, 81 S.Ct. 997, 1005-07, 6 L.Ed.2d 105 (1961), re'hg denied, 368 U.S. 869, 82 S.Ct. 21, 7 L.Ed.2d 69 (1961), and other cases cited herein. Under this approach, the State's purpose and the means used to achieve that purpose must be sufficiently related to justify any limitation upon free speech, although the extent to which a reviewing court will probe that means-ends relationship is dependent upon the context in which the State action operates and the burden which it imposes. See Board of Airport Comm'rs of Los Angeles v. Jews for Jesus, Inc., 482 U.S. 569, 573, 107 S.Ct. 2568, 2571, 96 L.Ed.2d 500 (1987); Cornelius v. NAACP Legal De- fense and Ed. Fund, Inc., 473 U.S. 788, 800, 105 S.Ct. 3439, 3448, 87 L.Ed.2d 567 (1985). For example, regulation of speech which does not focus upon the particular content of the speech sought to be regulated, but rather which seeks only to limit the time, place, or manner of speech in a non-public forum is subject to a less exacting standard of scrutiny, and the fit between the ends sought and the means used to achieve such regulation must merely be "reasonable" for it to survive judicial scrutiny. See United States v. Kokinda, 497 U.S. 720, 110 S.Ct. 3115, 111 L.Ed.2d 571 (1990) (plurality opinion) (postal walkway is a non-public forum, and therefore reasonable, content-neutral regulation is constitutionally permissible). See also Thornburg v. Abbott, 490 U.S. 401, 109 S.Ct. 1874, 104 L.Ed.2d 459 (1989); Frisby v. Schultz, 487 U.S. 474, 108 S.Ct. 2495, 101 L.Ed.2d 420 (1988); Kovacs v. Cooper, 336 U.S. 77, 69 S.Ct. 448, 93 L.Ed. 513 (1949).

[11]The State of Louisiana suggests that "a review of Louisiana cases considering free speech indicates that the state constitutional provision grants no additional rights beyond those granted to Louisiana's citizens by the federal constitution." Original Brief of State of Louisiana, P. 7, citing State v. Burgess, 543 So.2d 1332 (La.1989); State v. Newton, 328 So.2d 110 (La.1975); City of Baton Rouge v. Ewing, 308 So.2d 776 (La.1975); City of New Orleans v. Lewis, 263 La. 809, 269 So.2d 450 (1972), rev'd, 415 U.S. 130, 94 S.Ct. 970, 39 L.Ed.2d 214 (1974). Because we dispose of this case upon federal constitutional grounds, we find it unnecessary to address the extent of the Louisiana Constitution's protection of speech and expression.

However, LSA-R.S. 18:1462(A)(3) and (4),[12] which forbid the distribution of campaign literature and political advertising, are not content- neutral restrictions. Rather, these subsections of the statute, as construed by this Court, operate to prohibit all "political speech," albeit only within prescribed boundaries. Schirmer, supra, 608 So.2d at 649. Such content-based[13] regulation of speech is subject to strict scrutiny, partic-

[12]For the text of these subsections, see Note 1, supra. LSA-R.S. 18:1462(A)(2) will be considered later in this opinion.

[13]The United States Supreme Court "has held that the First Amendment's hostility to content-based regulation extends not only to a restriction on a particular viewpoint, but also to a prohibition of public discussion of an entire topic." Burson v. Freeman, supra, — U.S. at ——, 112 S.Ct. at 1850, citing Consolidated Edison Co. v. Public Service Comm'n of New York, 447 U.S. 530, 537, 100 S.Ct. 2326, 2333, 65 L.Ed.2d 319 (1980); Simon & Schuster, Inc. v. New York Crime Victims Bd., 502 U.S. 105, 115- 16, 112 S.Ct. 501, 508, 116 L.Ed.2d 476 (1991). "As a general rule, laws that by their terms distinguish favored speech from disfavored speech on the basis of the ideas or views expressed ularly when that regulation takes aim at "political speech," a category of speech to which "the First Amendment 'has its fullest and most urgent application.'" Eu v. San Francisco Democratic Comm., 489 U.S. 214, 223, 109 S.Ct. 1013, 1020, 103 L.Ed.2d 271 (1989), quoting Monitor Patriot Co. v. Roy, 401 U.S. 265, 272, 91 S.Ct. 621, 625, 28 L.Ed.2d 35 (1971). See also Boos v. Barry, 485 U.S. 312, 321, 108 S.Ct. 1157, 1164, 99 L.Ed.2d 333 (1988) ("a content based restriction on political speech in a public forum . . . must be subjected to the most exacting scrutiny"); First National Bank of Boston v. Bellotti, 435 U.S. 765, 784-785, 98 S.Ct. 1407, 1420, 55 L.Ed.2d 707 (1978) (citation omitted) ("[i]n the realm of protected speech, the legislature is constitutionally disqualified from dictating the subjects about which persons may speak and the speakers who may address a public issue"). Indeed, "there is practically universal agreement that a major purpose of (the First) Amendment was to protect the free discussion of governmental affairs." Mills v. Alabama, 384 U.S. 214, 218, 86 S.Ct. 1434, 1437, 16 L.Ed.2d 484 (1966). Accordingly, for a challenged statute to survive strict scrutiny it must be shown that the statute is "necessary to serve a compelling state interest and that it is narrowly drawn to achieve that end." Perry Education Assn. v. Perry Local Educators' Assn., 460 U.S. 37, 45, 103 S.Ct. 948, 955, 74 L.Ed.2d 794 (1983). See also Simon & Schuster, Inc., supra, at 117-18, 112 S.Ct. at 509.

This case offers a slight variation upon the "strict scrutiny" formula, however, because the affected interests include not only the State's interest in regulating elections and the citizen's interest in free speech and expression, but also the citizen's right to vote without being harassed or intimidated. Thus, this case requires that the defendant's right to free speech be reconciled with separate concerns which also possess a constitu-

Maxwell*, 384 U.S. 333, 361-363, 86 S.Ct. 1507, 1521-1522, 16 L.Ed.2d 600 (1966) (Court balancing free speech rights of trial participant's against an accused's right to a fair trial). Fortunately, the United States Supreme Court has addressed this "clash of freedoms" in the case upon which all of the courts which previously entertained this dispute relied in reaching their respective decisions, namely Burson v. Freeman.[15]

[14] No right is more precious in a free country than that of having a choice in the election of those who make the laws under which, as good citizens, they must live. Other rights, even the most basic, are illusory if the right to vote is undermined.

Wesberry v. Sanders, 376 U.S. 1, 17, 84 S.Ct. 526, 535, 11 L.Ed.2d 481 (1964).

[15] While this Court is aware that Burson was a plurality opinion in which only the Chief Justice and three associate justices of the Supreme Court joined, we join those courts before us in concluding that Burson must dictate, directly or indirectly, the result in this case. See, however, R.A.V. v. St. Paul, — U.S. —, 112 S.Ct. 2538, 2554-2555, 120 L.Ed.2d 305 (1992) (White, Blackmun, O'Connor, and Stevens, Jj., concurring) (questioning continued vitality of Burson). In doing so, we recognize that Burson represents somewhat of a departure from the trend in the jurisprudence of a number of lower courts. See Clean-Up '84 v. Heinrich, 759 F.2d 1511 (11th Cir.1985); Committee for Sandy Springs v. Cleland, 708 F.Supp. 1289 (N.D.Ga.1988); Florida Committee for Liability Reform v. McMillan, 682 F.Supp. 1536 (M.D.Fla.1988); Firestone v. News-Press Publishing Co., 538 So.2d 457 (Fla.1989); Dorn v. Board of Trustees, 203 Mont. 136, 661 P.2d 426 (1983). However, we also discern a separate trend in the jurisprudence of the Supreme Court, culminating in Burson, which shows deference to State regulation aimed at preserving the integrity of the electoral process. See Munro v. Socialist Workers Party, 479 U.S. 189, 107 S.Ct. 533, 93 L.Ed.2d 499 (1986); Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 96 S.Ct. 612, 46 L.Ed.2d 659 (1976) (per curiam); Broadrick v. Oklahoma, 413 U.S. 601, 93 S.Ct. 2908, 37 L.Ed.2d 830 (1973); Williams v. Rhodes, 393 U.S. 23, 89 S.Ct. 5, 21 L.Ed.2d 24 (1968); United Public Workers v. Mitchell, 330 U.S. 75, 67 S.Ct. 556, 91 L.Ed. 754 (1947). In addition, we observe that while Burson was only a plurality decision, the concurring opinion of Justice Scalia rested upon grounds even more deferential to State regulation. For these reasons, we adopt the analysis set out in Burson in our consideration of this case.

B. Burson v. Freeman: The First Amendment and the Electoral Process

In Burson, the United States Supreme Court considered the constitutionality of a Tennessee statute which prohibited the solicitation of votes and the display or distribution of campaign materials within 100 feet of a polling place. As noted by the United States Fifth Circuit in its consideration of this case,[16] the Burson Court's plurality found that the statute in question implicated several core First Amendment concerns, and accordingly subjected the statute to strict scrutiny. The result of this scrutiny was the conclusion that the Tennessee statute was enacted to foster a compelling state interest, namely "protecting voters from confusion and undue influence." Burson, supra, —— U.S. at ——, 112 S.Ct. at 1851. In addition, the plurality observed that "[w]hile we readily acknowledge that a law rarely survives (strict) scrutiny, an examination of the evolution of election reform, both in this country and abroad, demonstrates the necessity of restricted areas in or around polling places." Burson, supra, at ——, 112 S.Ct. at 1852.

Finding that "[a] long history, a substantial consensus, and simple common sense show that some restricted zone around polling places is necessary to protect that fundamental right," the plurality went on to evaluate whether the means utilized by Tennessee's legislature were narrowly drawn to achieve its desired end. Burson, supra, at ——, 112 S.Ct. at 1858. Under the conventional formulation of this aspect of strict scrutiny, the legislative "purpose cannot be pursued by means that broadly stifle fundamental personal liberties when the end can be more narrowly achieved," and therefore "[t]he breadth of legislative abridgement (of First Amendment rights) must be viewed in the light of less drastic means for achieving the same basic purpose." Shelton v. Tucker, 364 U.S. 479, 488, 81 S.Ct. 247, 252, 5 [16] See text at note 9, supra.

L.Ed.2d 231 (1960) (footnotes omitted). See also Ward v. Rock Against Racism, 491 U.S. 781, 799, 109 S.Ct. 2746, 2758, 105 L.Ed.2d 661 (1989) ("Government may not regulate expression in such a manner that a substantial portion of the burden on speech does not serve to advance its goals").

The Burson plurality at this point, however, departed from the traditional strict scrutiny analysis. It chose, instead, what it termed a "modified 'burden of proof' " approach, focusing not upon alternative means of achieving the compelling legislative purpose, but rather whether the means chosen by the State "significantly impinged" upon constitutionally protected rights. Burson, supra, —— U.S. at ——, 112 S.Ct. at 1857. The plurality made clear that this departure from precedent was "because a government has such a compelling interest in securing the right to vote freely" that "'Legislatures . . . should be permitted to respond to potential deficiencies in the electoral process with foresight rather than reactively.' " Id., at ——, 112 S.Ct. at 1856, 1857, quoting Munro v. Socialist Workers Party, 479 U.S. 189, 195-196, 107 S.Ct. 533, 537-538, 93 L.Ed.2d 499 (1986). The plurality was also careful to specify the limited context in which this "modified 'burden of proof'" was to operate: "it applies only when the First Amendment right threatens to interfere with the act of voting itself, i.e., cases involving voter confusion from overcrowded ballots, . . . or cases such as this one, in which the challenged activity physically interferes with electors attempting to cast their ballots." Id., —— U.S. at ——, 112 S.Ct. at 1856 n. 11.

Considering the statutory 100 foot proscription upon campaign advertising and voter solicitation before it, the Burson plurality declared, with little discussion, that "[w]e do not think that the minor geographic limitation prescribed by (the Tennessee legislature) constitutes such a significant impingement." Burson, supra, at ——, 112 S.Ct. at 1857. The plurality did go on to note that "[a]t some measurable distance[17] from the polls, of course, governmental regulation of vote solicitation could effectively become an impermissible burden." Id. Confining its decision to the facts before it, the plurality concluded only that "it is sufficient to say that in establishing a 100-foot boundary, Tennessee is on the constitutional side of the line." Id.

C. Application of the Burson Plurality's Approach to LSA-R.S. 18:1462(A)(3) and (4)

There is no doubt that the activities engaged in by Schirmer constituted "political speech," triggering the strict scrutiny analysis described supra. See Meyer v. Grant, 486 U.S. 414, 421-422, 108 S.Ct. 1886, 1892, 100 L.Ed.2d 425 (1988) ("the circulation of a petition involves the type of interactive communication concerning political change that is appropriately described as 'core political speech' "). Thus, following the Burson analysis, we must first ask whether the LSA-R.S. 18:1462(A)(3) and (4) are necessary to achieve a compelling state interest. If so, we must consider whether the statute as

[17]The Court also noted, perhaps contradictorily, that > we simply do not view the question whether the 100-foot boundary line could be somewhat tighter as a question of 'constitutional dimension.' Reducing the boundary to 25 feet, as suggested by the Tennessee Supreme Court, is a difference only in degree, not a less restrictive alternative in kind.

Burson, supra, at —, 112 S.Ct. at 1857. The United States Fifth Circuit relied upon this passage in reaching its decision, finding that it "suggests that the plurality would have supported a 600-foot limitation" such as that before this Court. Schirmer, supra, 2 F.3d at 122. We reject this reasoning insofar as it intimates that the size of the protective zone is irrelevant to a determination of the extent to which First Amendment rights have been "significantly impinged." As the Burson plurality itself observed, "[t]he real question is how large a restricted zone is permissible or sufficiently tailored." Burson, supra, — U.S. at —, 112 S.Ct. at 1856.

drawn "significantly impinges" upon the defendant's First Amendment rights.

Like the Burson plurality, we believe that "some restricted zone is necessary in order to serve the States' compelling interest in preventing voter intimidation and election fraud." Burson, supra, at —, 112 S.Ct. at 1855. This concern is at least as compelling in Louisiana, given what the Secretary of State, in his amicus curiae brief to this Court, terms our "unique and colorful political history, . . . a history rife with election tampering, intimidation, and fraud." The record before us contains testimony by a number of state officials attesting to the fact that the challenged statute's purpose is to create a protected zone wherein voters may exercise their right to vote free from unwanted interference or influence. Thus, like the United States Fifth Circuit, "[w]e conclude that Louisiana undoubtedly has a compelling interest in protecting its citizens' right to vote," and that a prohibitory statute somewhat like LSA-R.S. 18:1462(A) designed to protect the sanctity of the ballot box is necessary to further that interest. Schirmer, supra, 2 F.3d at 121.

Given this determination, we move to the question of whether the statute "significantly impinges" upon First Amendment freedoms. Were our review limited solely to the activities of Schirmer and the statute's effect "as applied," this Court, in light of Burson, would have no difficulty in finding defendant Schirmer's activities legitimately proscribed. The record contains a joint stipulation of fact, noted supra, which includes an agreement between the parties that Schirmer was at all relevant times conducting his activities within 100 feet of a polling place. Although not directly related to matters on the ballot, Schirmer's conduct, given his close proximity to the polling place, certainly offered the possibility of disrupting the voting process and intimidating prospective voters.

The Burson plurality observed that within Tennessee's "minor geographic limitation" of 100 feet a comprehensive ban on any activity which threatened the integrity of the election process was permissible. The plurality's reasoning was that although a more narrowly drawn statute, one directly addressing attempts to interfere with the electoral process, might be an available alternative, "[i]ntimidation and interference laws fall short of serving a State's compelling interests because they 'deal with only the most blatant and specific attempts' to impede elections."[18] Burson, supra, —— U.S. at ——, 112 S.Ct. at 1855, citing Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 28, 96 S.Ct. 612, 639, 46 L.Ed.2d 659 (1976) (per curiam) (existence of bribery statute does not preclude need for limits on campaign contributions). Indeed, "undetected or less than blatant acts may nonetheless drive the voter away before remedial action can be taken." Id. In light of the Burson plurality's approval of the 100 foot boundary employed by Tennessee, were the Louisiana statutory ban on all political speech limited to a 100 foot radius about polling places, we would likely reverse the ruling of the district court declaring the statute unconstitutional.[19]

However, Schirmer's motion to quash was granted by the court below not because LSA-R.S. 18:1462(A) impermissibly prohibited Schirmer's conduct, but rather because in doing so it exhibited an overbroad reach. The doctrine of overbreadth,[20] [18]The Burson plurality, in adopting this approach, appears to have departed from the general policy that "[b]road prophylactic rules in the area of free expression are suspect." NAACP v. Button, 371 U.S. 415, 438, 83 S.Ct. 328, 340, 9 L.Ed.2d 405 (1963).

[19]We note in passing that at least one other jurisdiction has read Burson to approve "a prohibition on all speech within certain geographic boundaries." State v. Petersilie, 334 N.C. 169, 432 S.E.2d 832, 842 (1993).

[20]Schirmer has raised arguments in this Court concerning whether the statute under which he is charged is unconstitutionally "vague," a specie of due process violation. We express some doubt regarding this proposition as it relates to LSA-R.S. 18:1462(A)(3) and (4), especially in light of our previ-

so-called, is a creature unique to the First Amendment, in particular Free Speech. It applies to statutes which, although used to punish activities which may be legitimately regulated, nevertheless include within their prospective reach speech or conduct protected by the First Amendment. See City of Los Angeles v. Taxpayers for Vincent, 466 U.S. 789, 104 S.Ct. 2118, 80 L.Ed.2d 772 (1984); Hill v. City of Houston, 764 F.2d 1156, 1161 (5th Cir.1985), cert. denied, 483 U.S. 1001, 107 S.Ct. 3222, 97 L.Ed.2d 729 (1987). See also Note, The First Amendment Overbreadth Doctrine, 83 Harv.L.Rev. 844 (1970). As overbreadth was explained in NAACP v. Button, 371 U.S. 415, 432, 83 S.Ct. 328, 338-339, 9 L.Ed.2d 405 (1963), > the (challenged statute) may be invalid if it prohibits privileged exercises of First Amendment rights whether or not the record discloses that the petitioner has engaged in privileged conduct. For in appraising a statute's inhibitory effect upon such rights, this Court has not hesitated to take into account possible applications of the statute in other factual contexts besides that at bar.[21]

ous construction of the challenged statute in response to the Fifth Circuit's certified question. See Schirmer, supra, 608 So.2d at 949 ("[w]e find that the clear intent of this statute . . . is to prohibit political activity within 600 feet of the polls on election day"). However, we also note that vagueness and overbreadth are related concepts, and that the Supreme Court often speaks of them in the same breath. See Dombrowski v. Pfister, 380 U.S. 479, 486, 85 S.Ct. 1116, 1120-1121, 14 L.Ed.2d 22 (1965). Accord, Note, The Void for Vagueness Doctrine in the Supreme Court, 109 U.Pa.L.Rev. 67, 110-113 (1960). Because we find LSA-R.S. 18:1462(A)(3) and (4) to be an unconstitutionally overbroad limitation upon Free Speech, we need not address the vagueness issue as to those subsections of the statute.

[21]However, since overbreadth is such "strong medicine," a court should strike a statute as overbroad "only when the flaw is a substantial concern in the context of the statute as a whole." Broadrick v. Oklahoma, 413 U.S. 601, 613, 615, 93 S.Ct. 2908, 2916, 2917-2918, 37 L.Ed.2d 830 (1973). See also Village

LSA-R.S. 18:1462(A)(3) and (4), as construed by this Court in response to the certified question from the United States Fifth Circuit, operates "to prohibit political activity within 600 feet of the polls on election day." Schirmer, supra, 608 So.2d at 949. Although we do not regard as unduly onerous such a prohibition (on all political activity) within the narrow confines approved in Burson (100 feet), when that blanket proscription on political speech is extended to 600 feet we find that "a difference only of degree" becomes a difference of kind, a difference of "constitutional dimension." Burson, supra, —— U.S. at ——, 112 S.Ct. at 1857. This is particularly true when the 600-foot limitation is considered in a crowded urban context, where, because of greater population density, polling places tend to be more closely situated. In such circumstances the 600 foot radius may often include a large number of surrounding streets, alleyways, and neutral grounds, with the application of the statute as written stifling political speech in traditional public fora. See Hague v. CIO, 307 U.S. 496, 515, 59 S.Ct. 954, 964, 83 L.Ed. 1423 (1939) ("[w]herever the title of streets and parks may rest, they have immemorially been held in trust for the use of the public"). We find such a burden upon the exercise of First Amendment rights to be a "significant impingement" on those rights, and thus conclude that LSA-R.S. 18:1462(A)(3) and (4), insofar as they prohibit all political activity (including that unrelated to ballot matters) within 600 feet of a polling place on election day, are unconstitutionally overbroad.

of Schaumburg v. Citizens for a Better Environment, 444 U.S. 620, 636-638, 100 S.Ct. 826, 835-837, 63 L.Ed.2d 73 (1980), re'hg denied, 445 U.S. 972, 100 S.Ct. 1668, 64 L.Ed.2d 250 (1980). We have no problem in applying an overbreadth analysis in this case, since the constitutional "flaw" which we perceive, i.e. the amount of protected speech drawn into the net of LSA-R.S. 18:1462(A), is central to the statute's purpose, namely to prohibit political expression around polling places in order to protect the integrity of the electoral process.

This is not to say that a more narrowly drawn statute, perhaps one which addresses only advertising and voter solicitation relative to matters on the ballot, like the 100 foot Tennessee statute in Burson, supra, but one which operates within 600 feet of a polling place, would similarly fail to pass constitutional muster. After all, the more narrowly tailored a statute is, the less protected speech it reaches, and concomitantly the less it impinges upon First Amendment freedoms. The "modified 'burden of proof'" test announced by the Burson plurality does not dictate that we consider whether, in achieving its goals, there are no alternatives available to the State which are less burdensome on First Amendment freedoms. Rather, we are required only to examine the extent to which the means chosen by the State burdens the exercise of First Amendment rights, i.e. whether those rights are "significantly impinged" by the State action.

We stress that there is no mathematical formula which marks the zones of permissible and impermissible regulation of speech, no " 'litmus- paper test' that will separate valid from invalid restrictions." Burson, supra, —— U.S. at ——, 112 S.Ct. at 1857, quoting Anderson v. Celebrezze, 460 U.S. 780, 789, 103 S.Ct. 1564, 1570, 75 L.Ed.2d 547 (1983), quoting Storer v. Brown, 415 U.S. 724, 730, 94 S.Ct. 1274, 1279, 39 L.Ed.2d 714 (1974). The constitutional problem with LSA-R.S. 18:1462(A)(3) and (4), as construed by this Court in our response to the Fifth Circuit's certified question, is not that their effect reaches as far as 600 feet from polling places.[22] Nor are these subsections invalid

[22]Jerry Fowler, the Commissioner of Elections, testified at the hearing on the motion to quash that the effective range of the statute was changed from the prior 300 foot threshold to a 600 foot radius in response to specific incidents in a 1979 election. In addition, the federal Fifth Circuit, albeit upon consideration of a different record, concluded that "[o]nly after the 300-foot limitation failed to remedy the poll worker problem did the legislature take the next step to 600 feet." Schirmer, supra, 2 F.3d at 122. We note these facts in solely because they impose a prophylactic ban upon all political speech; we have already stated earlier in this opinion that we read Burson to approve such comprehensive restrictions within 100 feet of polling places. Rather, today we hold only that when both of these aspects of the challenged provisions operate in tandem, extending a total ban on political speech to a distance of 600 feet from polling places, the resulting limitation of free speech at that point overburdens or "significantly impinges" First Amendment freedoms. The Burson plurality found "it sufficient to say that in establishing a 100 foot boundary, Tennessee is on the constitutional side of the line;" we find it sufficient to say that in establishing a 600 foot boundary which proscribes all manner of political speech, not just speech related to matters on the ballot, Louisiana has crossed that line.

D. The Constitutionality of LSA-R.S. 18:1462(A)(2)

Our decision to strike LSA-R.S. 18:1462(A)(3) and (4) as unconstitutionally overbroad does not complete our consideration of this case. Schirmer was also charged with a violation of LSA-R.S. 18:1462(A)(2), which makes it a crime to remain within 600 feet of a polling place after being given written instructions to leave by a poll commissioner or law enforcement officer. Since the constitutionality of this subsection of the statute was also implicated by the district court's quashing of the information, it is necessary to consider the constitutionality of this subsection of the statute as well.

LSA-R.S. 18:1462(A)(2) presents something of a different problem than subsections (3) and (4) of the statute since it does not on its face strike at protected speech. Rather, it affects only certain conduct, namely the act of remaining at a polling place after having received written instructions to depart.

conjunction with the observation that our decision today does not include any ruling concerning the constitutionality of the 600 foot statutory range alone.

This Court earlier visited this subsection of the statute in State v. Stilley, 416 So.2d 928 (La.1982), which also involved the prosecution of a defendant for refusing to leave the premises of a polling place after being instructed to do so. At the time of the Stilley decision, LSA-R.S. 18:1462(A)(2) made it a criminal offense "[t]o loiter within (600 feet) of any polling place." After considering the inherent vagueness of the term "loiter," the Court noted that "[a]lmost any citizen within a six hundred foot radius of a polling place . . . could be charged with loitering." Stilley, supra, at 929. In addition, the Court observed that "[a] criminal statute is unconstitutionally overbroad if its enforcement must necessarily be arbitrary." Id. Based upon these observations, the Court concluded that "the statute in question is both vague and overbroad," and accordingly declared it an unconstitutional exercise of legislative authority. Id.

The Legislature promptly acted to amend the statute. See La.Acts 1982, No. 778, § 1. The amended version of LSA-R.S. 18:1462(A)(2), the one now before the Court, makes it a crime for any person to remain within 600 feet of a polling place "after having been directed, in writing, by an election commissioner or law enforcement officer to leave the premises or area of a polling place."[23] The current subsection (2) of the statute, while criminalizing the refusal to leave a polling site after being instructed to do so by designated authorities, offers no guidelines to election commissioners or law enforcement officers regarding when it is proper to instruct a person to leave the vicinity of a polling site. Thus, the criminality of such conduct is a matter solely within the discretion of the official on the scene.

LSA-R.S. 18:1462(A)(2) no longer suffers from the vagueness that plagued its earlier incarnation, i.e., it now gives adequate notice to the general public of what conduct is criminal. See State v. David, 468 So.2d 1126, 1128-1129 (La.1984), cert denied, 476 U.S. 1130, 106 S.Ct. 1998, 90 L.Ed.2d 678 (1986). However, the updated version still suffers from the infirmities which concerned the Stilley Court, i.e., any citizen within 600 feet of a polling place may still be charged with a crime, and "enforcement must necessarily be arbitrary." While the Legislature may of course act to define criminal conduct, "[i]t cannot constitutionally do so through the enactment and enforcement of [a statute] whose violation may entirely depend upon whether or not a policeman is annoyed." Coates v. Cincinnati, 402 U.S. 611, 614, 91 S.Ct. 1686, 1688, 29 L.Ed.2d 214 (1971).

[23]LSA-R.S. 18:1462(A)(2) makes it clear that the prohibition does not apply when one is "exercising the right to vote."

The United States Supreme Court has "recognized . . . that the more important aspect of the vagueness doctrine 'is not actual notice, but the other principal element of the doctrine — the requirement that a legislature establish minimal guidelines to govern law enforcement.'" Kolender v. Lawson, 461 U.S. 352, 358, 103 S.Ct. 1855, 1859, 75 L.Ed.2d 903 (1983), quoting Smith v. Goguen, 415 U.S. 566, 94 S.Ct. 1242, 39 L.Ed.2d 605 (1974). We have recognized the compelling interest which the State has in maintaining the orderliness and integrity of the election process, but "[a]s weighty as this concern is, . . . it cannot justify legislation that would otherwise fail to meet constitutional standards for definiteness and clarity." Kolender, supra, 461 U.S. at 361, 103 S.Ct. at 1863 (citation omitted).[24]

We do not say that the Legislature cannot place limitations upon persons remaining in and around the environs of a polling place; in fact, we have already stated that such limitations are often necessary to the efficient functioning of the electoral process. We merely hold that the existence of such limitations cannot depend solely upon the whim and caprice of the official on-the-spot. See State v. Broom, 439 So.2d 357, 369 (La.1983) (plurality opinion). While we recognize that the State's Executive branch and district attorneys are accorded some discretion in the manner in which they enforce and prosecute criminal statutes, it is solely the province of the Legislature to designate the boundary between criminal and non-criminal conduct. See La. Const. Art. II, § 2; State v. Truby, 211 La. 178, 29 So.2d 758 (1947). Accordingly, we find LSA-R.S. 18:1462(A)(2), as currently written, unconstitutionally vague insofar as it fails to set forth adequate guidelines governing when and under what circumstances the provision is to be enforced.

[24]Although vagueness is a doctrine rooted in due process and not the First Amendment, we note that the State's design contains the "potential for arbitrarily suppressing First Amendment liberties." Shuttlesworth v. City of Birmingham, 382 U.S. 87, 91, 86 S.Ct. 211, 214, 15 L.Ed.2d 176 (1965).

E. LSA-R.S. 18:1462(A)(1)

Since Schirmer was not charged with its violation, we note that this decision in no way concerns the continued viability of LSA-R.S. 18:1462(A)(1), which prohibits voter solicitation within 600 feet of a polling place. In addition, since the legislative enactment of this statute contains a severability clause,[25] the striking of subsections (2), (3), and (4) of LSA-R.S. 18:1462(A) should not be read to suggest any constitutional infirmity on the part of LSA-R.S. 18:1462(A)(1).[26] See also LSA-R.S. 24:175.

[25] If any provision or item of this Act or the application thereof is held invalid, such invalidity shall not affect other provisions, items, or applications of this Act which can be given effect without the invalid provisions, items, or applications, and to this end the provisions of this Act are hereby declared severable.

La.Acts 1980, No. 810, § 2. See also La.Acts 1982, No. 778, § 4.

[26] Although not called upon to do so, we observe that a narrowly tailored statute such as LSA-R.S. 18:1462(A)(1), addressing itself directly to the evils of voter intimidation and in so doing minimizing the "impingement" of First Amendment freedoms, presents a markedly different question from the sort of broad limitation of political speech found unconstitutional supra.

III. Summary

In summary, we find LSA-R.S. 18:1462(A), subsections (3) and (4), which ban all political activity, even that unrelated to ballot matters, within 600 feet of a polling place on election days, to be an unconstitutionally overbroad infringement upon the First Amendment of the United States Constitution. In addition, we find LSA-R.S. 18:1462(A)(2) to be unconstitutionally vague. LSA-R.S. 18:1462(A)(1), however, was not charged in the bill of information and therefore is not implicated by this decision. Accordingly, the stricken subsections are hereby severed from the remainder of the statute, leaving LSA- R.S. 18:1462(A)(1) in effect. For these reasons, we affirm the decision of the trial court below quashing the bill of information in this case.

JUDGEMENT OF THE DISTRICT COURT AFFIRMED.

WATSON, Justice, dissenting.

Schirmer v. Edwards, 2 F.3d 117 (5th Cir.1993), U.S. cert. denied, —— U.S. ——, 114 S.Ct. 1396, 128 L.Ed.2d 70, 62 U.S.L.W. 3657, held that LSA-R.S. 18:1462, which prohibits electioneering around polling places, does not violate the First Amendment of the United States Constitution. The federal court applied strict scrutiny to decide that the 600-foot limitation is narrowly drawn to meet Louisiana's compelling interest in establishing a campaign-free zone. The constitutional compromise between the competing interests, i.e., freedom of speech and unimpeded voting, is not overbroad.

For the reasons assigned by the U.S. Fifth Circuit in Schirmer v. Edwards, I respectfully dissent.

KIMBALL, Justice, dissenting.

The constitutionality of La.R.S. 18:1462(A) was upheld by the United States Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals in a case involving these same parties. Schirmer v. Edwards, 2 F.3d 117 (5th Cir.1993). Applying the strict scrutiny analysis of Burson v. Freeman, —— U.S. ——, 112 S.Ct. 1846, 119 L.Ed.2d 5 (1992), the Fifth Circuit found La.R.S. 18:1462(A) to be valid under the First Amendment. A petition for certiorari was subsequently denied by the United States Supreme Court. Recall '92, Inc. v. Edwards, —— U.S. ——, 114 S.Ct. 1396, 128 L.Ed.2d 70 (1994).

The majority now strikes as unconstitutional the very same statutory provisions considered by the Fifth Circuit in Schirmer v. Edwards, supra, and assertedly does so on federal constitutional grounds. However, I see no reason to depart from the federal appellate court's interpretation of federal constitutional law. Although decisions of intermediate federal appellate courts are not binding upon this court, they are persuasive, State v. White, 321 So.2d 491 (La.1975), and highly persuasive when based on interpretation of the United States Constitution. For these reasons, I respectfully dissent.

DENNIS, Justice, concurring.

I respectfully concur.

The defendant challenged the constitutionality of La.R.S. 18:1462(A) under the free speech guarantees of both the Louisiana and federal constitutions. Therefore, the appropriate procedure for deciding a case such as this is to analyze state law, including state constitutional provisions, before reaching a federal constitutional claim. See State v. Hattaway, 621 So.2d 796 (La.1993) and State v. Perry, 610 So.2d 746, 750 (La.1992). Accordingly, I disagree with the majority's pretermission of the state constitutional question. However, because Article I, § 7 of our state constitution grants as broad and arguably broader protection of rights of free speech than the minimum First Amendment safeguards, Mashburn v. Collin, 355 So.2d 879, 891 (La.1977), and because I believe that the majority has applied those minimum safeguards correctly, I join in the judgment of the majority.

THEODORE SCHIRMER

ON REHEARING

WATSON, Justice, concurring in denial of rehearing.

On further reflection, and after considering the effect, particularly in urban areas, of a 600-foot (two football fields) prohibition against any type of political speech, I have concluded there is an unreasonable impingement on the United States and the Louisiana Constitutions. Therefore, I concur in the denial of a rehearing.

THE COURT: I think, both sides can agree that the statute in a real sense brings two of our most basic constitutional rights almost head to head. The right to free speech, freedom of expression is butting up against the right to vote. Both of which are basic and fundamental and essential rights in a democracy. The issue is whether the state in deciding that the right of free speech, free expression, or in this case, political expression, stops 600 feet from the voting booth, whether the state is — whether there is a rational basis for that determination and whether the state's election to put the bar at that point is reasonable and is a reasonable restriction of the corresponding — a reasonable enforcement of the right of citizens to vote. I have been reading Burson versus Freeman which is the United States Supreme Court case that apparently is the latest expression on that point, and I've been reading it over the weekend and different points of the testimony today. In that case Tennessee's 100-foot boundary was challenged as being an unconstitutional infringement upon the right to vote. Tennessee has — and from what I understand from the opinion and from other resources almost every state in the union has some prohibition on campaign activities within a certain distance from the polls. In Tennessee it was 100 feet. And pretty much the same activities as are covered in 1462 were prohibited in Tennessee in that 100-foot space. The Supreme Court in the Burson case found that the 100-foot boundary was not unreasonable. Specifically they stated that in establishing a 100-foot boundary Tennessee is on the constitutional side of the line. Whether that means that 99 feet is too close or 101 feet is too far, I don't know. It also appears from that opinion that the majority of the states enforce a 100-foot boundary, I think, Louisiana is — well, I think, Hawaii is number 1 with a 1000-foot boundary, and Louisiana is number 2 with a 600-foot boundary, and the majority of the states, I think, fall around the 100 to 250-foot boundary. In reaching their decision in the Burson case the Supreme Court didn't really give you a whole lot to go on other than to say there is nothing wrong with a hundred feet. It did state legislatures, we think, should be permitted to respond to potential deficiencies in the electoral process with foresight rather than reactively provided that the response is reasonable and does not significantly impinge upon the constitution of protecting rights. And they go on to say that at some measurable distance from the polls governmental regulation of vote solicitation could effectively become an impermissible burden akin to a statute which was struck down in Miller versus Alabama which I also read dealt with a statute that prohibited publishing newspaper editorials pro or con on election day. The court quickly struck that down. More recently the Fifth Circuit in Schirmer versus Edwin Edwards which, I think, is the federal counterpart of this particular matter noted that the Louisiana statute is six times the distance that was covered in the Supreme Court decision in Burson, and the area covered by the 600-foot limitation is approximately 36 times as large as the area that was covered in the Burson case, and as I indicated before that we're second only to Hawaii with a restricted radius of 600 feet. The testimony that has been presented of course indicates that the officials charged with enforcing these limits apparently have to wrestle with them every election. But I really didn't hear anything that they have a problem with — that they had a problem with at 100 feet which was the limit in November that would not have also been a problem at 600 feet. That was the reason for my question to Mr. Fowler whether the 100-foot limit which the state was forced to use in November presented any problems — or any different problems than they had in prior elections when the limit was 600 feet. And it was my appreciation of his testimony that there was no unique problem, nothing that they wouldn't have had had the distance been six times greater. The fact that the limit was increased to 600 feet following — was that the '72 election with Lambert? That may be the reason that it was increased to that distance, but the court just doesn't see a rational basis for that greater distance. In your motion to quash you allege that the statute is unconstitutional because of overbreadth, that it goes farther than necessary to achieve the result that is desired. And insofar as that refers to the fact that political activity is prohibited within 600 feet of a polling place, I agree and on that basis alone and no other. The other bases that you allege I do not find to be persuasive, but I do feel that the statute as written is overly broad and that the objectives that it seeks to achieve can just as easily and just as conveniently be achieved without that great an intrusion upon the right of speech and expression. So to that extent, to the extent that the statute prohibits such activities within 600 feet of a polling place I do find it to be unconstitutional. The motion to quash will be granted.

MR. UPTON: Thank you, Your Honor.

MR. MARCANTEL: Thank you, Your Honor. Please, note the state's objection —

THE COURT: Note the state's objection and assignment of error.

MR. MARCANTEL: That's correct, and the state would move for at this time an application to take writs on this matter.

THE COURT: Okay.

CERTIFIED QUESTION FROM THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT

PER CURIAM

Pursuant to Rule XII of the Rules of the Supreme Court of Louisiana, the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit certified the following question to this court:

> Whether La. R.S. 18:1462A proscribes on election day, outside of the polling place itself but within a radius of six hundred feet from the entrance thereto, all solicitation of signatures for a recall petition that is not on the ballot that is to be voted on at the election for which the polling place is open, and in the polling place or said six hundred foot radius all wearing of clothing or buttons bearing visible words or symbols supportive of such recall?

We granted certification, and now proceed to answer the question.[1]

[1]We note that our opinion deals only with the question certified, and we do not pas on any issues of constitutionality under either the United States Constitution or the Louisiana Constitution.

Dennis J. concurs. Although the statute does not prohibit sure speech or political activity dissociated from the election at hand unless it is combined with political advertising or the display or distribution of campaign literature, the plaintiffs on the present case seek to carry out such a combination of activities on election day.

La. R.S. 18:1462(A) provides:

§ 1462. Acts prohibited on election day; electioneering; exception; enforcement; penalty

A. Except as otherwise specifically provided by law, it shall be unlawful for any person, between the hours of 6:00 a.m. and 9:00 p.m., to perform or cause to be performed any of the following acts within any polling place being used in an election on election day or within any place wherein absentee voting is being conducted, or within a radius of six hundred feet of the entrance to any polling place being used in an election on election day or any place wherein absentee voting is being conducted:

(1) To solicit in any manner or by any means whatsoever any other person to vote for or against any candidate or proposition being voted on in such election.

(2) To remain within any such polling place or place wherein absentee voting is being conducted or within a radius of six hundred feet of the entrance of any such polling place, except when exercising the right to vote, after having been directed, in writing, by an election commissioner or law enforcement officer to leave the premises or area of a polling place or after having been directed, in writing, by a registrar or deputy registrar to leave the place wherein absentee voting is being conducted.

(3) To hand out. Place. or display campaign cards. pictures. or other campaign literature of any kind or description whatsoever.

(4) To Place or display political signs pictures. or other forms of political advertising.

[emphasis added].

We find the clear intent of this statute, when taken as a whole, is to prohibit political activity within 600 feet of the polls on election day in order to prevent disruption of the polling place and the election process. Although we agree that subsection (1) does not apply to the present case, we believe subsections (3) and (4) clearly proscribe the conduct at issue. Subsection (3) prohibits the handing out, placement or display of campaign literature "of any kind or description whatsoever." We find the solicitation of signatures for a recall petition not on the ballot at that election, but which its backers ultimately hope to get on the ballot, fits this broad definition of handing out or displaying campaign literature. Likewise, we hold the wearing of clothing or buttons supporting such a recall effort is a display of political advertising prohibited by subsection (4). Accordingly, we answer the certified question in the affirmative.[2]

DECREE

For the reasons assigned, we answer the certified question as follows:

> La. R.S. 18:1462(A)(3) proscribes on election day, outside of the polling place itself but within a radius of six hundred feet from the entrance thereto, all solicitation of signatures for a recall petition that is not on the ballot that is to be voted on at the election for which the polling place is open. La. R.S. 18:1462(A)(4) proscribes in the polling place or said six hundred foot radius all wearing of clothing or buttons bearing visible words or symbols supportive of such recall.

It is ordered that, pursuant to Supreme Court Rule XII, § 9, the clerk of this court send this judgment under the seal of this court to the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit and to the parties.

[2]We note that Attorney General of Louisiana, in opinion no. 92-650(A), reached a similar conclusion, as did the court of appeal in an unpublished opinion, Lacour v. State of Louisiana, 90-C-1772 (La. App. 4th Cir. 1990).

Theodor A. SCHIRMER, et al., Plaintiffs,

Shelley E. Corrington, Individually, et al., Plaintiffs-Appellants,

v.

Edwin W. EDWARDS, Governor of the State of Louisiana, and in his official capacity, et al., Defendants-Appellees.

No. 92-3900.

United States Court of Appeals,
Fifth Circuit.

Sept. 17, 1993.

Louisiana voters who were members of political organization seeking to recall governor brought suit challenging constitutionality of Louisiana statute proscribing campaign activity within 600-foot radius of polling places. The United States District Court for the Middle District of Louisiana, Frank J. Polozola, J., denied challenge, and plaintiffs appealed. After question certified to the Louisiana Supreme Court was answered, 608 So.2d 948, the Court of Appeals, Reynaldo G. Garza, Circuit Judge, held that: (1) statute is valid under the First Amendment, as Louisiana has compelling interest in providing for campaign-free zone around its polls, and geographic limitation is narrowly tailored to achieve compelling governmental interests, and (2) statute's application to political speech of individuals not on the ballot and buttons and t-shirts did not render it overbroad.

Affirmed.

1. Constitutional Law •90.1(1.2)

Louisiana statute proscribing campaign activity within 600-foot radius of polling places was not a content-neutral time, place, or manner restriction and was subject to strict scrutiny. LSA-R.S. 18:1462; U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

2. Constitutional Law •90.1(1.2)
Elections •311

Under the strict scrutiny test, Louisiana statute proscribing campaign activity within a 600-foot radius of polling places does not violate the First Amendment; state had compelling interest to protect its citizens' right to vote, and geographic limitation was narrowly tailored to achieve such interest. LSA-R.S. 18:1462; U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

3. Constitutional Law •90.1(1.2)
Elections •311

Louisiana statute proscribing campaign activity within 600-foot radius of polling places is not overbroad on ground that it applies to political speech of individuals not on the ballot and buttons and t-shirts; total ban on politicking within campaign-free zone was necessary to preclude need for on the spot enforcement. LSA-R.S. 18:1462; U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1.

Theodor A. Schirmer, Malibu, CA, Katherine Wheeler, Baton Rouge, LA, for plaintiffs.

James M. Ross, Roy Achille Mongrue, LA Dept. of Justice, Angie Rogers La Place, Asst. Atty. Gen., Baton Rouge, LA, for defendants-appellees.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Middle District of Louisiana.

Before POLITZ, Chief Judge, and REYNALDO G. GARZA, and JOLLY, Circuit Judges.

REYNALDO G. GARZA, Circuit Judge:

Appellants appeal the district court's adverse judgment, which denied their constitutional challenge to Louisiana's campaign-free zone codified at LSA-R.S. 18:1462. Persuaded that Louisiana has a compelling interest in creating a campaign-free zone, and that the statute is narrowly drawn to achieve that end we AFFIRM.

FACTS

The plaintiffs-appellants are a group of Louisiana voters, who are members of the political organization called Recall '92, Inc. The principal objective of the group is to recall Louisiana Governor Edwin Edwards. The recall procedure, which is codified at LSA-R.S. 18:1300.1 et seq., requires signatures on a recall petition of not less than one-third of the total electors of the voting area, collected and submitted within a 180-day period.[1]

In order to further their effort, the appellants seek to establish that LSA- R.S. 18:1462 is unconstitutional.[2] Section 1462 as interpreted by the Louisiana Supreme Court:

[1]In essence, this would require about 750,000 signatures.

[2]The current version of Section 1462 reads as follows:

> § 1462. Acts prohibited on election day; electioneering; exception; enforcement; penalty A. Except as otherwise specifically provided by law, it shall be unlawful for any person, between the hours of 6:00 a.m. and 9:00 p.m., to perform or cause to be performed any of the following acts within any polling place being used in an election on election day or within any place wherein absentee voting is being conducted, or within a radius of six hundred feet of the entrance to any polling place being used in an election on election

> [P]roscribes on election day, outside of the polling place itself but within a radius of six hundred feet from the entrance thereto, all solicitation of signatures for a recall petition that is not on the ballot that is to be voted on at the election for which the polling place is open. [Section 1462] proscribes in the polling place or said six hundred foot radius all wearing of clothing or buttons bearing visible words or symbols supportive of such recall.[3]

Prior to the November 3, 1992 election, appellants brought suit to enjoin the application of Section 1462 so that they would be able to obtain the required amount of signatures within the 180-day window. The appellants sought to circulate petitions, obtain signatures, wear buttons, display paraphernalia, and day or any place wherein absentee voting is being conducted:

(1) To solicit in any manner or by any means whatsoever any other person to vote for or against any candidate or proposition being voted on in such election.

(2) To remain within any such polling place or place wherein absentee voting is being conducted or within a radius of six hundred feet of the entrance of any such polling place, except when exercising the right to vote, after having been directed, in writing, by an election commissioner or law enforcement officer to leave the premises or area of a polling place or after having been directed, in writing, by a registrar or deputy registrar to leave the place wherein absentee voting is being conducted.

(3) To hand out, place, or display campaign cards, pictures, or other campaign literature of any kind or description whatsoever.

(4) To place or display political signs, pictures, or other forms of political advertising. LSA-R.S. § 1462.

[3]The statement on the application of Section 1462 was issued by the Louisiana Supreme Court in response to the prior panel's certification of the question while the temporary restraining order pending appeal was considered and granted.

pass out other materials to support their cause at the November 3, 1992 election. There was nothing on the ballot pertaining to the recall effort.

On October 3, 1992, Theodor Schirmer was not permitted to vote with a Recall 92 T-shirt at one location, and then at another location was arrested for violating Section 1462 by attempting to solicit signatures on a recall petition. Shelley Corrington was also not permitted to vote because she was wearing a T-shirt advertising the recall effort. There were numerous other plaintiffs, who had similar experiences in forwarding the recall drive.

PROCEDURE

The plaintiffs brought suit in the Middle District of Louisiana pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §§ 1331 and 1343(a)(3) and (4) seeking declaratory and injunctive relief against the application of the campaign-free zone. On October 19 and 20, 1992, the district court conducted a two-day trial to determine the constitutionality of LSA-R.S. § 18:1462.

The plaintiffs launched three grounds of attack on Section 1462: (i) the statute placed an excessive burden on their First Amendment rights because it proscribed campaign activity within a 600-foot radius around polling places; (ii) even if constitutional, Section 1462 only applied to issues or persons on the ballot; or alternatively (iii) the statute was enforced in a discriminatory and content-rooted manner in derogation of the plaintiffs' First Amendment rights.[4]

The district court, relying principally on Burson v. Freeman, —— U.S. ——, 112 S.Ct. 1846, 119 L.Ed.2d 5 (1992), found that [4]The district court declined to rule on the plaintiffs' discriminatory application claims—persuaded that the issue would be better raised as a defense to a state court criminal action. The appellants combine this argument with their void for vagueness defense.

the statute was constitutional. The court determined that Section 1462 created a constitutional campaign-free zone around polling areas, and applied to both issues and parties whether or not they were on the ballot.

The plaintiffs appealed to the Fifth Circuit, and in the interim sought temporary injunctive relief pending appeal. The district court denied plaintiffs' application for a temporary restraining order; however, an earlier panel of this court granted plaintiffs' motion for an injunction pending appeal. See Schirmer v. Edwards, No. 92-3900 (5th Cir. Oct. 29, 1992). At long last, we are now able to render a final decision on appellant's claims.

DISCUSSION

The appellants assert on appeal that Section 1462 is invalid under the First and Fourteenth amendments. They contend: (i) Louisiana does not have a compelling interest in providing for a 600-foot campaign-free zone around its polls; (ii) even if the state has a compelling interest in a campaign-free zone, the statute is not narrowly tailored to achieve that interest because 600 feet is excessive; (iii) the statute is facially invalid because its content restriction is substantially overbroad; and (iv) the statute is void for vagueness.

We find that: (i) Louisiana has a compelling interest in maintaining campaign-free zones on election day; (ii) the statute is narrowly tailored to achieve that compelling interest; (iii) the statute is not substantially overbroad; and (iv) we need not address the void-for-vagueness argument. Therefore, the district court's decision is AFFIRMED.

i. Does Louisiana have a Compelling Interest in Maintaining a Campaign-Free Zone around its Polls During Elections?

Section 1462 posits the First Amendment's guarantee of the right to free speech against the state's attempt to secure its citizens' right to vote in an environment free from intimidation, harassment, confusion, obstruction, and undue influence. This conflict of First Amendment rights necessarily requires a compromise between the two. The Supreme Court addressed this issue head on last term in Burson v. Freeman, — U.S. ——, 112 S.Ct. 1846, 119 L.Ed.2d 5 (1992).

In Burson, the court found a Tennessee Statute that proscribed campaign activity within a 100-foot radius of its polls on election day to be constitutional. The court found that the statute implicated three First Amendment concerns: (i) regulation of political speech; (ii) regulation of speech in a public forum; and (iii) regulation of speech based on content. The Burson plurality[5] found that a content-based restriction on political speech in a public forum is subject to strict scrutiny.[6] Strict scrutiny requires Louisiana to show that Section 1462 is narrowly tailored to achieve a compelling governmental interest. See Perry Educ. Ass'n v. Perry Local Educators' Ass'n, 460 U.S. 37, 45, 103 S.Ct. 948, 954, 74 L.Ed.2d 794 (1983).

Undeniably, both the Tennessee statute and Section 1462 are content-based restrictions. Each singles out and sanctions public discourse on politics—an area deep within the confines of the First Amendment. See, e.g., Eu v. San Francisco County Democratic Cent. Comm., 489 U.S. 214, 223, 109 S.Ct. 1013, 1020, 103 L.Ed.2d 271 (1989) (citations omitted) ("the First Amendment has its fullest and most urgent application to [political] speech"). Clearly, Section 1462 does not apply to any other type of speech.[7] Consequently, the statute is not a content-neutral time, place, or manner restriction and, thus, is subject to strict scrutiny.

[5]Justice Blackmun wrote the plurality opinion that Chief Justice Rehnquist, and Justices White and Kennedy joined. Justice Kennedy filed a concurring opinion. Justice Scalia filed an opinion concurring in the judgment. Justice Stevens wrote the dissent, which was joined by Justices O'Connor and Souter. Justice Thomas took no part in the decision.

[6]Justice Scalia concurred in the judgment of the court. In doing so, he concluded that the regulation at issue was a reasonable viewpoint — neutral regulation of speech in a non-public forum. Justice Scalia concluded that the areas adjacent to a polling forum on or near election day do not constitute a traditional public forum and, thus, the statute should not be subjected to the strict scrutiny standard. See Burson, — U.S. at ——, 112 S.Ct. at 1859-61 (Scalia, J., concurring) (citing Greer v. Spock, 424 U.S. 828, 96 S.Ct. 1211, 47 L.Ed.2d 505 (1976)).

Moreover, the statute must still be constitutionally gauged under the strict scrutiny standard even though it is viewpoint-neutral. See, e.g., Boos v. Barry, 485 U.S. 312, 319, 108 S.Ct. 1157, 1162, 99 L.Ed.2d 333 (1988) (viewpoint-neutral statute that prohibited use of signs within 500 feet of foreign embassies content-based); see also Consolidated Edison Co. v. Public Serv. Comm'n, 447 U.S. 530, 537, 100 S.Ct. 2326, 2333, 65 L.Ed.2d 319 (1980) ("[t]he First Amendment's hostility to content-based restrictions extends not only to restrictions on particular viewpoints, but also to prohibition of public discussion on an entire topic").

In Burson, the state of Tennessee proffered two grounds upon which to support its compelling interest in a campaign-free zone: (i) the protection of its citizens' right to vote freely for the candidate of their choice; and (ii) the protection of the right to vote in an election that is conducted with integrity and reliability. The Supreme Court agreed that these interests were compelling, but the court noted that "[t]o survive strict scrutiny . . . a state must do more, . . . it must demonstrate that the law is necessary to serve the asserted interest." Id., — U.S. at ——, 112 S.Ct. at 1852.

The court traced the longstanding history of election problems that fostered the need for reform, which led to the Ten nessee statute in Burson, as well as Section 1462. See id., — U.S. at ——, 112 S.Ct. at 1852-55. The court noted that the two-fold problem that these regulations were enacted to cure was: (i) voter intimidation; and (ii) election fraud. Id., — U.S. at — —, 112 S.Ct. at 1855. Finally, the plurality concluded that "wide-spread and time-tested consensus demonstrates that some restricted zone is necessary in order to serve the States' compelling interest in preventing voter intimidation and election fraud." Id. [8]

Louisiana State Representative Charles Lancaster, who authored the 1980 amendments to Section 1462, testified before the court below. The 1980 amendments expanded the campaign-free zone from 300 feet to 600 feet. Representative Lancaster testified that the statute primarily sought to guard against: (i) voter intimidation; (ii) voter harassment; and (iii) to provide unobstructed access to the polls. Lancaster testified that the problem largely emanated from poll workers, who bombarded voters in and around the polls. Apparently, it was common practice to use poll workers to inundate voters just prior to their entry to the polls. The legislature felt compelled to remedy the situation statutorily. The intent of the statute was to encourage voter participation. Under the statutorily created campaign-free zone, voters are free to vote without passing through a gauntlet of poll workers.

We conclude that Louisiana undoubtedly has a compelling interest to protect its citizens' right to vote. Burson reaffirmed that states have a compelling interest in protecting the right to vote—"a right at the heart of our democracy." Burson, — U.S. at ——, 112 S.Ct. at 1851; see also Anderson v. Celebrezze, 460 U.S.

[8]The dissent interpreted the purpose of the statute somewhat differently reasoning that the statute served: (i) to protect orderly access to the polls; and (ii) to prevent last-minute campaigning. Id., — U.S. at ——, 112 S.Ct. at 1861 (Stevens, J., dissenting).

780, 788 n. 9, 103 S.Ct. 1564, 1570 n. 9, 75 L.Ed.2d 547 (1983).

ii. Is the 600-Foot Limitation in Section 1462 Narrowly Tailored to Protect Louisiana's Compelling Interest?

Given the fact that Louisiana has a compelling interest in establishing a campaign-free zone, the question then becomes whether 600 feet is a valid limitation. Interestingly, Louisiana's statute is the second largest limitation in the country. Hawaii's 1,000-foot campaign-free zone is the largest in the country. See Haw.Rev.Stat. §§ 11-132 & 19-6(7). [9]

It is difficult to demarcate the point where the state's compelling interest in a campaign-free zone ceases and beyond which any content-based infringement becomes unconstitutional. The Burson court recognized this when it held "that some restricted zone around the voting area is necessary to secure the State's compelling interest." Burson, —— U.S. at ——, 112 S.Ct. at 1856 (emphasis in original). Justice Blackmun tempered this statement when he reasoned "at some measurable distance from the polls . . . governmental regulation ... could effectively become an impermissible burden akin to the statute struck down in Mills v. Alabama, 384 U.S. 214, 86 S.Ct. 1434, 16 L.Ed.2d 484 (1966)."[10]

The appellees contend that the state is not required to prove that the 600- foot zone is perfectly tailored, as long as it does not significantly impinge on constitutionally protected

[9]Texas prohibits campaigning with a car microphone within 1,000 feet of the polling place on election day. See Tex.Elec.Code Ann. s 61.004.

[10]In Mills, the Supreme Court struck down a statute that made it a crime for a newspaper editor to publish political editorials on election day. Mills, 384 U.S. at 220, 86 S.Ct. at 1437. Interestingly, the Mills opinion distinguished the present situation when it admonished "[w]e should point out at once that this question in no way involves the extent of a state's power to regulate conduct in and around the polls in order to maintain peace, order, and decorum there." Id. at 218, 86 S.Ct. at 1436-37.

rights.[11] The Burson plurality concluded that Tennessee's campaign-free zone represented only a "minor geographic limitation" that did not significantly impinge upon constitutionally protected rights. Burson, —— U.S. at ——, 112 S.Ct. at 1857. Justice Blackmun explained "we simply do not view the question whether the 100-foot boundary line could be somewhat tighter as a matter of 'constitutional dimension. Munro v. Socialist Workers Party, 479 U.S. 189, 197 [107 S.Ct. 533, 538, 93 L.Ed.2d 499] (1986). Reducing the boundary [line] is a difference only in degree, not a less restrictive alternative in kind." Burson, —— U.S. at ——, 112 S.Ct. at 1857 (emphasis added) (citing Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 30, 96 S.Ct. 612, 640, 46 L.Ed.2d 659 (1976)). This statement reflects the difficulty that lies in determining the exact point at which to draw the line, and it suggests that the plurality would have supported a 600- foot limitation.

The appellants point to the numerous exit-polling cases that have invalidated much smaller restrictions around polling areas. For example, in Daily Herald Co. v. Munro, 838 F.2d 380 (9th Cir.1988), the Ninth Circuit held a 300-foot restriction on exit-polling to be unconstitutional on its face. Id. at 389 (the content-based statute was not narrowly tailored). Daily Herald is representative of many cases holding that much smaller limitations do not survive strict scrutiny in the exit polling context. See, e.g., National Broadcasting Co., Inc., v. Cleland, 697 F.Supp. 1204, 1215 (N.D.Ga.1988) (holding 150-foot exit-polling limitation not narrowly drawn, but construed to be constitutional up to 25 feet). We reject the application of the exit-polling cases to the present context because the underlying state interests differ in each case. While there is no evidence of widespread voter harassment or intimidation by exit-pollers, there is evidence that poll workers do create these problems. Consequently, the state's compelling interest is called to greater heights in creating a campaign-free zone.

> [R]equiring proof that a 100-foot boundary is perfectly tailored to deal with voter intimidation and election fraud 'would necessitate that a State's political system sustain some level of damage before the legislature could take corrective action. Legislatures, we think, should be permitted to respond to potential deficiencies in the electoral process with foresight, rather than reactively, provided that the response is reasonable and does not significantly impinge on constitutional rights.'

Further, Representative Lancaster testified that the 300-foot limitation, which preceded the 1980 amendments, did not prevent the continued hiring of poll workers. The 600-foot limitation was created to dissuade politicians from hiring poll workers. Poll workers were one of the principal causes of voter intimidation and harassment that was perceived to be causing low voter turnout. Further, according to Lancaster, the 600-foot limitation has served its purpose and poll workers are no longer used.

The Louisiana legislature tried to utilize a 300-foot campaign-free zone to protect its citizens' rights to vote. The legislature, thus, found a less restrictive alternative inadequate. Only after the 300-foot limitation failed to remedy the poll worker problem did the legislature take the next step to 600 feet. Therefore, we find that Section 1462's geographic limitation is narrowly tailored to achieve a compelling governmental interest. [12]

[12]While we have found that Louisiana's campaign-free zone is narrowly tailored, we note that in Clean-Up '84 v. Heinrich, 759 F.2d 1511, 1514 (11th Cir.1985), the Eleventh Circuit held that a 100-yard (300-foot) campaign-free zone was unconstitutionally overbroad. Id. (cited by the Burson dissent). Further, the only post-Burson case to directly address the campaign-free

iii. Is Section 1462 Substantially Overbroad?

The appellants next contend that Section 1462 is overbroad because it applies to: (1) the political speech of individuals not on the ballot ("non-ballot political speech"); and (2) buttons and T-shirts ("passive political speech").[13]

The appellants argue that Louisiana does not have a compelling interest in banning non-ballot political activity nor passive political speech around the polls. Appellees offer two defenses with regard to Section 1462's total ban on political speech: (i) if only ballot-related campaigning were proscribed voter intimidation and harassment problems would still exist because of enforcement and security problems; and (ii) solicitation for a recall petition has a greater disruptive potential than all other political speech.

The first argument, that suppression of ballot-related activity alone is insufficient, is rooted in the argument that ballot campaigners could achieve their ends by posing as non-ballot campaigners in order to gain access to the confines of the forbidden 600-foot radius. Representative Lancaster and Representative Accardo testified that an across-the-board ban on politicking was necessary to protect voters' rights because any zone issue appears to be Calchera v. Procarione, 805 F.Supp. 716 (E.D.Wisc.1992). The Calchera decision focused on the plurality opinion in Burson and noted the opinion's statement that at some point a campaign-free zone would be over-inclusive. The court held that the statute's 500-foot proscription was overbroad, and noted that it imposed a much greater infringement on the First Amendment than the 100-foot limitation addressed in Burson. See Calchera, 805 F.Supp. at 719-20. However, the Wisconsin statute in Calchera was found to prohibit homeowners from expressing th political views on their own property. The district court grasped on this factor to distinguish Burson. See id. at 720. There is no evidence in the record before us that the Louisiana statute is applied similarly.

[13]We will use the term "passive political speech" to refer to buttons and t-shirts.

exceptions to the total ban on political speech would necessarily create the need for on the spot enforcement.

Lancaster and Accardo stated that to allow any politicking in the campaign- free zone would open the door to subterfuge. If some people were allowed to engage in political speech in the campaign-free zone it would create two problems: (i) on-the-spot enforcement decisions about what was proscribed by the statute; and (ii) increased security needed to weed out those engaged in ballot related speech.

To avoid this morass the legislature decided that a total ban was necessary. They reasoned that if they had to police the campaign-free zone to the extent necessary to weed out the disguised poll workers, then voters would still be intimidated and harassed. The heightened security itself would no doubt result in voter intimidation—the evil they sought to cure. Further, problems with on the spot decision making and varying degrees of enforcement would result in uneven application of the statute. Consequently, Section 1462 is not overbroad.

Justice Stevens, in his dissent in Burson, made the only known reference with regard to proscribing non-ballot campaigning around polling areas. Justice Stevens noted that the Tennessee statute did not apply to "political debate and solicitation concerning issues or candidates not on the day's ballot." Burson, —— U.S. at ——, 112 S.Ct. at 1864 (Stevens, J., dissenting) (emphasis added). Stevens also noted that the Tennessee statute did not prohibit exit polling, leaflets, posters or buttons. He reasoned that these factors "severely undercut[ ] the credibility of [Tennessee's] purported law-and-order justification." Id. (Stevens, J., dissenting). These statements suggest that Justice Stevens would be more comfortable with an across the board ban on politicking in the campaign-free zone based on the same logic forwarded by Representatives Lancaster and Accardo. In any event, the issue of proscribing non-ballot campaigning was not an issue in Burson and appears to be an issue of first impression.

The appellees further argue that there is an important distinction between a recall petition and other campaign-related activity. In all other campaign activity the voter is free to exercise his rights in a secret ballot booth after having weighed and observed all campaigning activity whether it be far or near the polling venue. However, in the recall petition context, even if there is no recall on the ballot, voters must either sign the petition on the spot or the parties seeking their signature will immediately know that they have been rejected. The appellees contend that this renders the state's compelling interest to protect the voter to be even greater when weighed against the First Amendment rights of those seeking to forward the recall effort.

This argument is forceful and it is true that this distinction is meaningful. However, Section 1462 does not target only recall petitions nor does it even mention them. Further, there is no evidence that the legislature considered the 600-foot limit with regard to recall petitions in 1980 when it was amended.[14]

Accordingly, we find that a total ban on politicking within the campaign-free zone is not overbroad. In fact, the total ban in the present context is the most defensible position. The state has a compelling interest in protecting its voters and the proffered reasons given by the legislature demonstrate a reasonable compromise to the problems that necessitated the campaign- free zone in the beginning.

[14]Since the advent of this case Louisiana has enacted a statute that expressly creates a campaign-free zone applicable only to recall petitions. LSA-R.S. s 18:1300.6. We express no opinion as to the constitutionality of Section 1300.6.

iv. Is Section 1462 Void For Vagueness?

The appellants challenge Section 1462 on vagueness grounds contending that it is void because it is subject to discriminatory enforcement and fails to provide fair notice. The district court found that this issue would be better suited as a defense to a criminal prosecution. The Burson court treated this defense similarly when it stated "[i]n any event, these arguments are "as applied" challenges that should be made by an individual prosecuted for such conduct." Burson, — U.S. at — n. 13, 112 S.Ct. at 1857 n. 13.

In light of our prior panel's certification to the Louisiana Supreme Court with regard to the statute's application to non-ballot matters it is clear now that the statute applies to non-ballot matters. However, there was some confusion created by some contrary attorney general opinions issued previously. In any event, the appellants do not appear to be in a position to assert this argument at this time.

CONCLUSION

Louisiana has a compelling interest in establishing a campaign-free zone. The 600-foot limitation is narrowly drawn and not an excessive infringement on the First Amendment. Thus, the geographical limitation survives strict scrutiny. Moreover, the statute creates a total ban on politicking within the zone. The need for a total ban is compelling and Section 1462 is not overbroad. Legislatures must necessarily compromise between two competing First Amendment interests in creating a campaign-free zone. Louisiana's zone has evolved over time and at present represents a constitutional compromise. Further, the appellants' void for vagueness argument is better left to another day. Therefore, the judgment of the district court is AFFIRMED.
